GOVERNOR CLEVELAND, of New York, has been somewhat roughly criticised for granting a conditional pardon to a convict in Auburn prison. The man was understood to have become acrimonial through intoxicating liquors. The condition of his release is that he shall abstain from the use of intoxicants for five years. If the pardoned man is found to be violating the condition he can be re-arrested and made to serve out the balance of his term. This ticket of leave system has not been very common, but there are a number of precedents for the Governor's course.
DON'T DRINK IT.—G. Rawline Allen, of Grand Traverse, Mich., sends the following to the Toronto press: "I arrived in your city last evening from the Falls on my way to Michigan. On the train I got into conversation with a respectable looking young man, who persuaded me to taste what he called his celebrated hospital Jamaica rum. I am safe in saying that I took no more than two mouthfuls, shortly after which I remember nothing at all this morning, when I found myself minus my watch, a gold one, and nearly all my money. I am perfectly certain I was drugged. Although not a drinker, I have frequently swallowed two glasses of whiskey and kept all my senses. Of course I was wrong to take anything from a stranger, but I write this as a warning to travellers, and I am an old one myself. I hope the officers will look out for the good-looking young villain."
