

'Red' Storey's Presence Seen Assuring Success

SUMMERSIDE BUREAU OF THE GUARDIAN

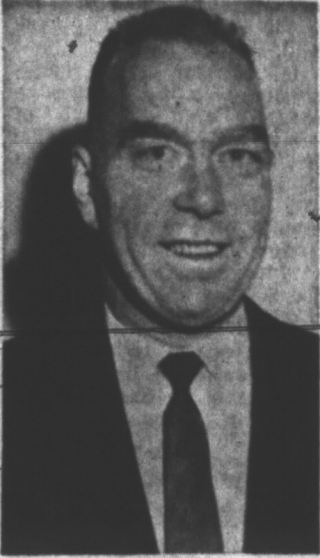

Although there was never any doubt about it, the success of the Feb. 6 Sportsmen's Dinner was assured last night with the announcement that ex-NHL referee, "Red" Storey will be in attendance.

Arrangements were completed by James T. Hogan, secretary-manager of the George R. Peakes VC Branch, Royal Canadian Legion, sponsors of the star-studded event, when he was in Montreal last week.

"Red" Storey, perhaps the most colorful referee that ever blew a whistle in the National Hockey League won for himself a host of fans as the result of his visitation to the first Sportsmen's Dinner two years ago. One of the most entertaining speakers following the banquet, Storey relates "one humorous anecdote after another in rapid-fire fashion that keeps his audience in stitches. And most of his side-splitting tales are taken from actual experiences, most of them while a referee.

It was on April 5, 1960 during a playoff game between the Chicago Black Hawks and Montreal Canadiens, at Chicago, that "Red" Storey's career as one of the most capable referees in the NHL was challenged, and as a result of that game he retired from the league.

Chicago fans became enraged and went after Storey's scalp on that eventful night. A couple of irate fans took a swing at him and threw everything from programs to bottles in his general direction. Storey came out of the fracas unscathed, at least physically.

"RED" STOREY

However he resigned shortly afterwards, after NHL President Clarence Campbell had been quoted as saying that Storey "froze" on two calls when it was alleged that penalties should have been called against the Canadians for tripping Chicago players.

No doubt "Red" Storey will again be asked for his comments on this memorable night for hockey fans when he attends the dinner Feb. 6.

Already such sports celebrities as Bobby Simpson, and Danny Gallivan have announced they will be present and at least two more are expected to announce their intentions soon. Songbird Donna Miller, TV and radio star will also be making her second appearance at the upcoming Sportsmen's Dinner.

2 Livestock Buildings Proposed For Carnival

SUMMERSIDE BUREAU OF THE GUARDIAN

A proposal that two buildings be erected to house livestock was discussed at last night's bi-monthly meeting of the directors of the Summerside Lobster Carnival and Livestock Exhibition presided over by president, Arthur Johnston.

A committee headed by the president was given the green light to look into costs, plans and specifications for the buildings and report back at the next meeting. The proposed buildings would be approximately 24 feet wide and 100 feet long.

Several members of the executive motored to Alberton last Saturday to inspect a livestock building erected by the Alberton Exhibition Association last year which is 24 by 100 feet.

The buildings, it was revealed, would house between 120 and 140 animals.

Acceptance of the duties as laid out at the last meeting was received from the various service clubs, through their representatives, and most of the committees have been formed to head up the various items assigned to each club.

The remaining committees will be appointed when the clubs hold their next meeting.

Various members reported on the meetings held with the minister of agriculture, Hon. Andrew MacRae; the provincial secretary, Hon. J. David Stewart; federal MP, Orville Phillips and Mayor W. A. Currie. In all cases the meetings were for the purpose of requesting assistance with various aspects of the carnival, including the cost of erecting livestock buildings, grants, a federal fisheries display and a possibility of the federal department of fisheries entering a float in the opening day parade.

The directors stated they were well received in all cases and results were favorable.

Active Year Reported By New London Parish

KENSINGTON — The annual meeting of the Parish of New London was held at St. Mark's Hall, Kensington on Thursday evening with a good attendance. The rector, Rev. Ronald Parsons presided and opened his meeting with prayer.

The minutes of last annual meeting were read by the vestry clerk, William Pidgeon. The treasurer, Mrs. Donald Casley read the financial statement which showed a balance on hand of $425.53.

It was decided to increase the insurance on the rectory to $10,000.

John Pillman, president of the Layman's Association, appealed to the men of the congregation to increase the membership. He said the organization was primarily for fellowship, but some money had been raised and spent. The men had done some work on the rectory grounds, paid $60 for till, $30 to missions, $30 to St. Margaret's Church in Halifax, and $15 to Sunday School by Post and Radio.

William Pidgeon reported a successful year in the AYPA.

The amount of local help to be hired to assist in geological drilling, connected with oil explorations in the province, will depend on the needs of the driller who is expected to arrive with drilling equipment within a few days.

Robert Howie, department of mines and technical surveys engineer, has arrived in the province and is making preliminary preparations for the first drilling which will be done in the Wellington and French River areas.

Domestic In Big Demand

SUMMERSIDE — There is a big demand for "domestics" at the Summerside branch of the national employment service but few placements can be made as few are registered for this type of work.

Miss Blanche Hogg, placement officer, stated that girls just do not want to work at employment where they cannot get Unemployment Insurance stamps.

The majority of girls from the surrounding area who come to Summerside seeking employment, avoid domestic work in private homes, and generally wind up taking jobs as waitresses in restaurants. Some take positions as domestics in motels and other seek places where they are assured of getting insurance stamps.

Miss Hogg stated that at present there is little demand for skilled or even unskilled laborers, which is generally the case each year at this time.

Navigation Course Adds Radar, Loran Equipment

The courses in navigation at the Provincial Vocational School are adding more electronic navigational aids for use in classroom instruction.

The course in primary navigation which is underway at the present time and which lasts six weeks will be followed by an advanced course.

Eugene Gorman, deputy minister of fisheries, said there are 30 in the primary course and a heavy advanced booking has been made for the advanced course. The chief instructor for the primary course is Capt. Lester White of the SS Charles A. Dunning.

The primary course includes instruction in the use of electronic navigational aids, navigation, splicing and other general seamanship knowledge.

The electronic equipment includes a standard radar set, a Raytheon 1700 with a 12-mile range, which is used in draggers; a navy-type Loran DAF4 which has a separate antenna on the roof of the vocational school; a radio direction finder which uses radio beams such as at the Charlottetown airport; and depth sounders. All equipment is similar to that used on modern druggers and larger vessels.

The equipment is being installed by Anson Dowling, formerly of Charlottetown, now the Sydney manager for Gabriel Aero-Marine Instruments Ltd. The radar was installed yesterday and the Loran will be installed shortly, it was stated.

The navigation course which is approved by the Unemployment Insurance Commission as a re-training course is being sponsored jointly by the vocational training branch of the department of education and the federal department of labor.

UIC APPROVED The approval of the course by the UIC means that men receiving unemployment insurance benefits may take the course without losing their benefits or being called for work until the course's completion.

In addition to Island fishermen taking the course are several crew members of department of transport vessels and other ships which are laid up during the winter months.

These men are aiming at higher classifications in their jobs and as a step towards writing their mate's examinations, it was stated by Mr. Gorman, who is looking forward to a higher standing for the course in the next few years.

Exploration Site Shows Contrast

SUMMERSIDE BUREAU OF THE GUARDIAN Reminiscent of drilling operations conducted at Wellington three winters ago, a Guardian reporter visited the site of the former drilling operations at 4:30 yesterday afternoon and watched surveying operations.

The survey conducted by Graham Rogers, provincial geological officer, and Robert Howie, geological surveyor with the Canadian government, was to establish the site of the former hole which is now completely hidden by normal farming operations conducted in the field since that time. The two men also established the location, close to the former hole, where the new drilling operation will commence as soon as equipment expected on Wednesday or Thursday of this week arrives.

In contrast to the hefty blanket of snow and snow banks that greeted the previous drilling crews who arrived at the site, the access road and the field in which the drilling operation will take place, was almost completely bare of snow yesterday.

A further advantage is offered also in the paved highway that now covers the clay road between Wellington and Mont Carmel, along which the drill site is situated.

Mr. Rogers, who played an active part in representing the province in the previous drilling operation, told The Guardian that the drilling that will commence here will be of a different nature than the 1958-59 well, known then as Wellington No. 1 well, and will take the form of "core" drilling to ascertain geological formations to a depth of about 1,700 feet.

He said the new drilling tests were expected to produce "interesting results", but added that the drilling was not an exploration for oil, because the drilling operation would not be nearly as deep as the previous well at the same site.
