Russia, Canada Air Service Is Discussed

OTTAWA (CP)—Air Canada would probably lose money on an air service between Canada and Russia, the Commons railway committee was told Monday.

Air Canada President Gordon R. McGregor told the committee that he is doubtful that an air link between Moscow and Montreal would be economically sound.

He said during a recent trip to Russia he sounded out the Soviet airline, Aeroflot, and discovered it was receptive to the idea of a reciprocal air service between the two countries.

He added that he found Aeroflot officials well briefed on the ins and outs of bilateral air agreements — although Russia does not make such agreements. Under the Soviet system, Aeroflot makes its own agreement with airlines of other nations.

Mr. McGregor expressed fears about the Soviet system of international bookings, under which the Russian tourist agency, Intourist, handles all passenger traffic out of Russia.

He said Air Canada's traffic on any Russia-Canada flights would be in the hands of Intourist and thus subject to the generosity of that agency.

The Air Canada president said the decision on whether air services are established between Canada and Russia rests with the two governments.

Tidal Patterns Are Reported In Atmosphere

VANCOUVER (CP)—The day will come, says a United States scientist, when travellers may study charts of the tides which sweep the heavens much as mariners today look to the tides of the sea.

Prof. Bernhard Hourwitz of the University of Colorado said here study of atmospheric tides will have direct application on space programs when man launches manned craft flying "30 to 40 miles" above the earth.

He spoke to the 230th annual meeting of the American Meteorological Society.

The atmosphere has two distinct tidal patterns, he said. These can be noticed on a barometer. A lunar tide is caused by gravitational force and the stronger solar tide is caused by a thermal force, 16 times that of its lunar counterpart.

The basic pattern is one of a 12-hour tidal period superimposed on a 24-hour tidal period.

One of the chief areas of research, Dr. Hourwitz said, is to find an explanation for seasonal variations in thermal tides.

Behavior of thermal tides can be understood by use of equations of motion, theremodynamics and diversion. A physical cause for thermal tides has not yet been proven.

One theory is that such tides are caused by heat from the earth's surface and by direct absorption of solar radiation.

CAUGHT WITH BOMBS

MADRID (AP) — Police said Tuesday a former sub-lieutenant in Generalissimo Franco's civil war forces has been picked up on charges of tossing bombs in Madrid. The man, Andres Luiz Marsuez, 57, was carrying five bombs in his pocket when picked up in a coffee shop. More than 30 bombs have exploded in Madrid in the last two months.
