WHIM ROAD W
Mrs. Wesley Campbell was hostess to the Whim Road Women's group.

farmed tidily his fields down the years, a man of this road, completed all his earthly harvestings. A widower for some childless and aged, he nevertheless was a farmer who was privileged to live out his life on the farm, and amid the surroundings he best knew.

He was a kind man, considerate, quiet spoken, peaceable. And as we could appreciate, somewhat lonely, as are folks who have seen many loved ones, and friends, go to their rest of all flesh. So the folks of this road went soberly to round today, because of the passing of this, one of the best of neighbors and friends.

Buily the harvesting continued this week, when the weather encouraged its progress, so that by this, on farms of the name, a nice lot has been gathered in. "Give us a few more nice days" one of the family said this evening, "and that will see harvest's end!"

This week, young and older at Alderlea, were privileged to go, more or less a civilly and happily, to their work. Children to their schools, cooks to their households care a few farmers to their fields. We saw smiles, and the odd very young crystal tear. We chuckled over the amusing items of the days, and sighed, remembering the sad things. We bit the rattle of leaves underfoot. And all over the length and breadth of the land, and up and down our valley of the mill stream, the exquisite colorings which come from autumn's brushes were being deepened and spread.

"We must" a friend said this evening, "take a drive along the countryside while the shades are still bright and fresh on the trees. Because" she added, "it will be a long time before autumn comes again!"

We remember the week's delights. They come to mind so easily. And what of ourself, do we recall? Did we walk its paths carefully? Or have we been mindful of the little things of life and living which, after all, can contribute so much to make or break another's day? Because as one says:

"One gentle word that we may speak
Or one kind loving deed
May, though a trifle poor and weak,
Prove like a tiny seed;
And who can tell what good may spring
From such a very tiny thing?"

MARY HAWORTH

Husband's Miserly Streak Shocks Bride Of A Year

Dear Mary Haworth: Is it unreasonable for a wife to use happily to varying degrees of a department store account to buy her husband a birthday gift? My husband says it is, and that it would mean that he was paying for his own present.

We have been married a year. I gave up a fairly good paying job because it involved traveling and also because my husband insisted. We still have an income of about $16,000 a year.

I have a weekly allowance of $30 to buy food, pay laundry and dry cleaning costs and clothes myself. This barely suffices and now he insists that it should cover gift-buying too.

Money may not be the root of all evil, but it most certainly is the root of much ill in our household.

I didn't notice these miserly traits in my husband when we were dating together. He seems to be getting worse, though I don't know why, as I've never gone on a spending spree, which might upset his sense of security.

At this point I am embarrassed to have any of my friends or relatives visit. He discourages it because of the cost involved. He says he has no friends, only business acquaintances.

To show how frugal he would have me live, he wants me to hang wet clothes in the apartment rather than use the laundry dryer, which costs 10 cents per load. Is there a solution? He walks out in a rage if I attempt to discuss the problem. Sincerely, E.P.

Dear E.P. in his magnificent encyclopedic letter "Peace on Earth," addressed to persons of good will, the late Pope John XXIII gave to the world one of the most inclusive, most acute inventories of the rights and duties of humankind that has ever been authored.

And one of its most-quoted, most powerful reminders is addressed to husbands. He says, "Certain rights has likewise the wife to claim those rights as marks of his dignity, and others have the obligation to acknowledge those rights and respect them."

This is a brilliant spark of so-called truth, too often overlooked by peacably inclined

ELLEN'S DIARY

Nature's Paint Brush Deepens Autumn Shades

Saturday... and week's end! Its wide peace rests now on the farmlands—that serenely which denotes a pause in the week's occupations to observe a day of rest and peace. Machines are silent, Harvestlands wait. Tomorrow, the Churches will call their faithful to worship. And even while a service is being longed, our eyes will, it may be, stray to the harvest-fields brutalized by a sunny wind, or left now in the amber of stubbles. And above and beyond great white clouds will float solemnly on the blue of the autumn sky.

And we shall be grateful, returning thanks from the heart, for the gifts and loveliness of the season at hand; for the plenty of field and garden and orchard, for the satisfaction of the springtime seeds' increase, and the sheer delight of the harvest days.

We shall too, "thinking on these things" recall that there is another harvest besides those of earth. Remembering that today, only this morning, one who had garnered many a harvest in and since his boyhood, and
