Strange But True

By F. H. MacArthur

Most persons who have passed the century mark will be able to recall how our farmers in this province used to decorate their horses' harness with a jingling mass of ornamental and highly polished brasses. But how many know that behind the brasses is this superstition. Namely: "You must always have brasses on a horse's harness to keep away the devil."

In pioneer days the horse was the mainstay of the tillers of the soil; if a farmer lost his horse, he was, indeed, helpless. The horse had therefore to be protected in every possible way from witches, fairies, and the Old Boy.

Few superstitions were more widely held in the rural areas of England, Ireland, and Scotland. The superstition came to this little corner of the new world along with the first English settlers but soon died out after their arrival. But the custom of dolling up old dobbie in brass buttons and bows, lasted almost until the introduction of mechanical farming drove the old gray mare off the land.

What is thought to be the world's most unusual epitaph was a collection of recipes which were changed every day.

Durijat, chef of the French King, Louis Philippe, provided recipes which were affixed on his tombstone instead of an epitaph. Each day a new recipe was set up in a metal frame container.

Plattery is a recommended cure for stiff necks. There are few heads it won't turn.

Birds are faithful to old nesting places. A pair of robins have to the writer's knowledge nested in the same part of a home for the past eight years. Eagles have been known to nest in the same tree or the same cliff for 100 years. An eagle shot with a gold collar round its neck bore a date ninety-five years earlier.

It is a fact that the more slowly a bird becomes mature the longer it lives.

Monogamy among animals is something to make certain persons sit up and take notice. Take the fox, for example, he is really monogamous, though he goes astray a good many times. The most faithful Daddy fox, carrying food for his vixen and keeping an open eye for the welfare of his offspring, is bound to fall from grace if the opportunity occurs. In fact, all foxes are opportunists.

Strange but true, the sow badger has the exceptional gift of postponing parturition if she so desires. For example, if she is taken into captivity already pregnant, she may not give birth to her young for over a year after the appropriate time.

Others normally carry their young about 9 weeks, but curiously enough their eyes do not open, nor do they obtain their full hearing, until about 6 weeks old, instead of say, twelve days, as is normal for creatures of their size.

It is interesting to note that nearly all fur-bearing animals mate in the spring, while most of the cloven-hoofed animals mate in the autumn.

The ling (a fish), holds the world record when it comes to laying eggs — thirty million of them! Other fish that have chalked up amazing records are the turbot, 9 million, and the cod 7 million. But the waste is enormous and it has been calculated that in the case of the cod, less than one egg in every million actually survives to become a fully formed fish.

In the case of shell fish the wastage is terrific too. Out of every 2 million oyster babies only

"THUNDER IN THE EAST" AT CAPITOL, SUMMERSIDE

High adventure, suspense and brilliant performances by a quartette of Hollywood's most outstanding performers sparks Paramount's new pulse-throbbing drama, "Thunder in the East," which opens today at the Capitol Theatre, Summerside. The four starring personalities of this unusual story, set against the background of a revolt-ridden province in far-off India are, Alan Ladd, Charles Boyer, Deborah Kerr and Corinne Calvet.

Setting off the pulsating action that punctuates the film is Alan Ladd, who, excels as a "love 'em, slug 'em" brand of character that has brought him world fame. Ladd flies a lead of munitions into the besieged city of Ghandahar with the idea of getting rid of the contraband and making a quick profit.

Complications arise when a high government official, powerfully portrayed by Charles Boyer, refuses to buy the guns on the grounds that the only way to fight violence is through peaceful means. Ladd then finds himself, caught square in the middle of a maelstrom of seething passions. Further involvement in the outcome of the struggle occurs when he meets and falls in love with Deborah Kerr, who as a beautiful blind English girl born and raised in the Indian provinces turns in a memorable performance.

1/8 of them survive their numerous enemies, crabs, lobsters and so on.

The infant ape and monkey is nursed like the human child. In the case of the marmoset, it is the dad, however, who must rock the cradle and sing the lullaby songs. The male has the baby thrust into his arms soon after birth and only when its cries for food ring the air does its fickle mama fill its belly, handing back the youngster to her husband the moment her duties have been performed. The baby monkey is nursed, first in its daddy's arms, later resting on one hip and finally upon his back.

At the end of three or four months the father gives up his job of baby sitter and Mrs. Monkey takes over where he left off. However, most monkeys are devoted mothers and will grieve over the loss of a little one for a long period.

When the South American coypu rat goes for a swim, the young offspring cling to mama's back — three a side — aiding her progress by vigorous strokes of their small, webbed hind feet, so that the rat when swimming in family presents the appearance of a miniature galleon under way.

Address and Presentation

A large number of friends and neighbours gathered at the spacious home of Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Clarkin, New Wiltshire, on Aug. 5th to tender a farewell party to their daughter Esther Margaret who was leaving Aug. 10th for the Mother House, Montreal to join the Sisters of Notre Dame Order. The evening was pleasantly spent in music and dancing, the music being furnished by Mathias Flood and Mrs. Eugene McQuillan. Mr. Linus Trainor called the house to order and explained the object of the gathering. Miss Ethel Callaghan read a beautiful worded address while Miss Doris MacDonald presented Esther with a well-filled envelope. Included in this envelope was a gift from the C.W.L. Esther thanked all for their kindness. All present sang "For She's a Jolly Good Fellow." A dainty lunch was served to all.

Following is the address:
Dear Esther,

This evening, amid our music and merriment, there prevails a sense of seriousness. We are all aware and proud of your decision to dedicate your life's work to the service of God. This is a grave decision to make in your early life but, knowing your personal outlook on things and your family background, we are confident that it will be a happy and successful one. We shall all pray that you will have the courage and endurance to overcome the trials and problems that eventually confront one of our Lord's soldiers. As a symbol of our esteem for you and as a remembrance of your neighbours at home we ask you to accept this purse. We wish for you the role of happiness and fulfillment of your desired vocation. We are sure that the great order of Notre Dame will be enriched by your membership and that your native parish will be always proud of you.

Signed,
On behalf of your friends and neighbours.
