Besides her sorrowing husband and parents, she is survived by a son David, Montague, and two daughters, Janet and Christine at home. Three brothers and five sisters also survive: Daniel, Preston, David, Memie, Christine, (Mrs. John Garnham) all of Montague; Aletha (Mrs. David Stewart) Southport; Elizabeth, (Mrs. Victor Grant) Millview; and Catherine in Boston. Two sons, Daniel and John, predeceased her.

The funeral, which was largely attended, was held at the Baptist Church, Montague, Sunday afternoon, and was conducted by Rev. J. D. Davison, minister of the Charlottetown Baptist Church, who spoke words of comfort to the bereaved family and friends. Miss Clemmie MacLean presided at the organ.

The hymns were "Safe In The Arms Of Jesus", and "The Old Rugged Cross". A solo, "Good Night And Good Morning" was beautifully rendered by Mrs. J. D. MacLeod.

arrive from Paris by boat-train tonight. A dual secretary in Paris said the trip was not connected with the King's illness—it was arranged a long time ago. He said the Duchess of Windsor—the reason for Edward's abdication—would not accompany the Duke.

Britons of all ranks massed outside the palace in the early morning hours waiting for any scrap of news.

Some brought picnic lunches and seemed ready to stay through the night under overcast skies that threatened rain. There were women and small children. Old men and women sat in the grass in parks nearby.

Mounted police patrolled the streets in addition to the usual palace sentries in their boxes, motorcycle police and foot policemen.

The crowd had no definite notice beforehand that the operation would be performed today but newspapers had suggested it was imminent.

At 5 p.m. a tall man in a gray suit walked across the palace forecourt to the main gate. The crowd pushed forward expectantly.

He posted the doctors' bulletin and turned away. The crowd burst through a police cordon to read it. The crowd sang "God Save The King."

Then police cleared the gate area. After dark, people still were streaming in their orderly lines to see for themselves what the King's physicians had written.

Less Dangerous Now One London specialist said the danger in removal of part of a lung is much less nowadays than it used to be, due to the use of penicillin, sulfa and other life-saving drugs.

Had the operation been announced as a lobectomy, which means removal of a whole lobe of the lung, it would have had much graver implications, the specialist said.

As it is, he added, the operation on the King was obviously a major one which would entail cutting away some of the ribs to enable the surgeon to reach the affected part of the lung.

"This operation calls for considerable skill in the use of anaesthetics," the specialist said. "If successful it is invariably followed by a long period of nursing and convalescence."

"The bulletin suggests that the operation has been successful," the specialist added. It was believed that the operation would be performed today but newspapers had suggested it was imminent.

Prayers For King

Prayers for the sick King were offered in churches throughout Britain and the Commonwealth.

Two clergymen standing by the memorial to Queen Victoria, 100 yards from the palace, fell on their knees, and bowed their heads in prayer. Many women wept openly.

A group of Welsh miners, up for a sightseeing tour, stood in a tight little group. Whenever one of the diplomats' cars, bringing foreign representatives with messages of sympathy, passed through the palace gates they pushed forward and asked: "Is there any news yet of His Majesty?"

Millions more, who did not go to the palace, waited for news from the radio. When the bulletin came out, the BBC interrupted all programs to make the announcement.

Paddington Station, one of London's big rail terminals, was the scene of a demonstration of public sympathy while news was still awaited.

When the National Anthem was played at the end of the usual Sunday morning concert given by a railway band, crowds waiting for trains, instead of just standing to attention as is usual, started to sing the words of the anthem.

For a few moments the bustle of the station was stilled as railroad men and travellers stopped to join in.

Queen Mary remained at her London home near the palace. She was joined by her daughter, the Princess Royal, and the Duke of Gloucester, the King's younger brother.

Princess Elizabeth and the Duke of Edinburgh twice visited the palace from their nearby home at Clarence House. On the second visit they heard the news of the operation. In the morning they went to a special service, conducted by Dr. Geoffrey Fisher, Archbishop of Canterbury, at his London residence. The Queen and Princess Margaret also went.

Nature Of Operation Under normal practice in an operation of this kind—as set out in a recent textbook by the surgeon, Price Thomas himself—preliminary injections of a germ-killing drug such as aureomycin would be given the King.

This would remove the danger of infection after the operation. The anaesthetist would then inject sleep-inducing drugs such as morphine, hyoscine and thiopentone. This would be given at varying intervals covering about two hours.

The last injection is thiopentone, injected into a vein. With the King unconscious in the operating theatre, the anaesthetist

Rally Day At Montague Church

The annual rally day service was held in St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Montague, Sunday morning, and was conducted by the minister, Rev. F. N. Young.

The program, as organized by the board of S. S. and Y. P. S. of the Presbyterian Church in Canada, was followed, the theme being "The Bible Is A Living Book". A very interesting address on the subject was given by Rev. Mr. Young, who told the story of the good beginning but bad ending of King Jehoshaphat as recorded in 2nd Kings, 11th and 12th chapters.

The music was led by the junior choir, under the direction of Mrs. Elsie Watterworth, with Mrs. A. F. Campbell presiding at the organ. Two vocal duets "Footsteps of Jesus" and "Marvellous Grace" were beautifully rendered by Jean Anne and Donald Munroe, daughter and son of Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm Munroe, Whim Road.

The service closed with the hymn, "Lord, Speak To Me, That I May Speak", and the benediction by Rev. Mr. Young.

would then deepen still further his insensibility to feeling. Through a plastic tube put down the windpipe, anaesthetic gases such as oxygen or cyclopropane would be pumped into the lungs in a steady stream from gas cylinders. Six oxygen cylinders of this nature were taken to Buckingham Palace Saturday.

While this is going on, other doctors would be keeping constant watch on pulse and blood pressure. The surgeon approaches the affected area of the lung from the back by removing one or more ribs. Blood vessels supplying the lung are clamped so that no serious loss of blood takes place. Then the diseased tissue is cut away.

Sometimes the main branch to the lung of the windpipe has to be severed during the operation after which it must be carefully sealed by close stitching. Blood transfusions often take place while the operation is being performed.

Though an extremely delicate operation, it now is carried out successfully every day by chest surgeons.

Speculate May Go Abroad As anxious hours passed after the operation there was some speculation that the King may go abroad to escape Britain's damp, foggy autumn and winter during convalescence. Buckingham Palace would not comment on this possibility.

Most British newspapers expected a council of state would be formed to do some of the King's work. The council is made up of persons in the line of succession to the throne.

Princess Elizabeth presumably could be a member and still carry out her plans to visit America. One member of the council might be called upon to dissolve Parliament Oct. 4 and convene a new one Nov. 6 after the general election Oct. 25. The King normally carries out such routine.

The Queen and Princess Elizabeth and Margaret remained near the King through the evening. In Liverpool Cathedral of the Church of England the kneeling congregation recited "God Save The King" a prayer.

Queen Mary kept in touch by telephone from her home, Marlborough House. Blinds were drawn over the palace windows but flickers of light indicated considerable activity of elevators.
