'Centre' Gallery Seen Medium For Promoting Island Culture

"All the provinces and the national government have contributed to make the Fathers of Confederation Centre a national shrine" Moncrieff Williamson, curator of the Confederation Centre Museum and Art Gallery said in an address before Rotatians at their weekly luncheon meeting held at the Charlottetown Hotel yesterday.

The speaker described the special position P.E.I. held in the set-up and referred to the project in part as a "reduced form of the National Gallery of Canada".

The development of local objectives and the staging of certain exhibitions may now be brought into the area because of the grade "A" fire-proof building, he said. Next year, for the first time in history, the work of 15 Canadian artists will be on view in Charlottetown following an exhibition tour of the U.S.A. terminating in San Francisco, the speaker noted.

The paintings of Robert Harris of Charlottetown are being traced and will be assembled for an all-Canada showing in 1967. This exhibit will give the nation an opportunity to see and appreciate the artistic heights reached by "one of the Island's most talented sons", the speaker said.

ART CLASSES POPULAR

Touching on the local aspect of the centre, Mr. Williamson said it was a basic rule in aiming and directing a start in helping to further the cultural benefits to all Island children. "The art classes now have an enrollment of 79 and there is a waiting list. This is very satisfactory," the speaker said.

Another project which gives promise of being worth-while will bring thousands of colored slides from all over the world, to be sent to all the schools on the Island. "Children will be able to see for themselves, what foreign places look like", the speaker said.

"It is going to be much easier for the future of our people if in their childhood and youth their creative ability has been developed through art classes and educational program. With their inner resources developed they will not feel completely useless", the speaker stated.

More than 500 visitors a day and a total of 2,558 one Sunday afternoon and evening recently, indicated the popular acceptance of the gallery and the art section.

"All Canada will be represented in art, crafts and sculpture to the edification of local people and tourists in this enormous gallery designed to meet the requirements of the next 100 years", Mr. Williamson concluded.

Introduced by chairman Donald Gass, the speaker was thanked by Robert Smith, who made
