

Large Freighting Aircraft Seen For Arctic Oil Search

By DAN POWERS
CALGARY (CP)—The vice-president of a drilling firm sees the day when large freight aircraft "will be used extensively" in the search for petroleum in Canada's north.

R. M. Borden, vice-president and general manager of S and T Drilling Co. Ltd. of Edmonton, said in an interview that such aircraft will receive wide use in supplying the North and making major drill rig movements.

"The future... is dependent on the search for hydrocarbons and whether this search extends further north. Certainly all indications point in this direction."

Aircraft capable of freighting portable drilling rigs into isolated areas are the C-130 Hercules, a four-engine turbo-prop transport with a load limit of 25 tons, and the huge C-5, which has a load limit of 70 tons.

ARE MILITARY PLANES
 The C-5, a four-engine jet aircraft, now is in the production stage for the United States armed forces. The RCAF has flown Hercules transports for several years, but the plane has not been licensed commercially as yet.

S and T worked with National Supply Co. and General Electric to produce in Edmonton an air portable drilling rig that could be dismantled for transport by a Hercules in 23 loads of 25 tons each.

The rig, now drilling for Atlantic Refining Co. in the Norman Wells area of the Northwest Territories, was not moved by Hercules, but by truck and river barge.

Whether S and T Drilling purchases more of the Norman Wells-type rig depends on industry acceptance of "the present unit," Mr. Borden said.

"Certainly the rig has been most favorably received to date, having been labelled as imaginative and advanced in its layout."

STARTED FROM SCRATCH
 S and T started from scratch to design the air-portable rig. Smaller-diameter, lighter drill pipe was obtained. The front of the rig and drill pipe carriers were redesigned so that 3,000 feet of drill pipe could be airlifted in packages of 25 tons each.

Even the rig's catwalk was designed to double as a huge tool box with a hinged lid, sized for the Hercules.

Present air-lift capacity of helicopters is limited to about 4,000 pounds and a moderate-sized drilling rig can weigh 300 tons. Operating limit of such helicopters under these conditions is 50 to 60 miles.

The basic rig, Mr. Borden said, simply does not lend itself to helicopter transport, although larger helicopters, when they are available, will find an important place in rig or supply movement for the industry.

RC Church Feud In Poland Blows Up Over W. Germany

WARSAW (AP)—Poland's angriest church-state feud in a decade has blown up over a question remote from church taxes, religious instruction or holy day processions, the usual friction points.

This dispute flared over relations with West Germany, an emotional question for a country that lost 6,000,000 people in the Second World War.

Stefan Cardinal Wyszyński, Roman Catholic Primate of Poland, and the Polish bishops are accused by Premier Wladyslaw Gomułka's Communist government of being soft on Germany and of meddling in foreign policy.

State authorities seem furious about a letter of reconciliation and forgiveness which Polish bishops sent the bishops of Germany during the Vatican council last November, about the German reply and about a Polish church statement welcoming the reply.

Apparently confident that the Polish church is vulnerable on the German question, Gomułka's regime has launched a vigorous campaign of press and radio attacks against the bishops.

Gomułka, first secretary of the ruling Communist party, devoted a television speech to the church and German issues. He accused the church of trying to lean Poland toward the West and declared: "This nation knows what it met at the hands of the West in history. It cannot be reoriented to the West."

Acknowledging that most Poles are Roman Catholic, he added: "They go to church, but in this matter, they will never believe the Polish bishops."

The intensity of the campaign against the bishops and the issues they raised may indicate the Warsaw regime desires to keep alive hostility toward West Germany and a squelch serious talk of reconciliation.

The dispute provides the government a handy excuse to restrict the size of the May 3 celebration of Poland's 1,000 years of Christianity.

Chances had appeared good last fall that Pope Paul might visit the celebration. Today, however, government officials say such a visit is unthinkable.

It has also become questionable whether bishops from West Germany will get entrance visas and whether Cardinal Wyszyński will be allowed to leave on a planned summer visit to Polish millennium observances in the United States and Canada.

"No German bishops wanted here" has been daubed on walls at Czestochowa, the southern Polish city where the celebration series portrays the Catholic Church in Germany as having been pro-Nazi and expansionist.

Indian-Eskimo Rights Probe Recommended By Yukon MP

WINNIPEG (CP)—An Indian-Eskimo rights commission, free of federal government bureaucracy, should be set up to look after the needs of Indian and Eskimo people, Erik Nielsen (PC-Yukon) suggested here.

Speaking to 700 delegates attending the 12th annual Manitoba Indian - Metis Conference, Mr. Nielsen said the commission would have its own funds and terms of reference.

"This body would report to Parliament, but would otherwise be unfettered by the century-old administrative and fiscal controls that have stifled the imagination of government officials."

The commission "would muster the experience and ability of the Indian and Eskimo people in a way no federal bureaucracy would." It could plan and implement a pattern of services and programs that would be consistent with the wishes of people of Indian and Eskimo background.

The federal Indian affairs branch, he said, is to be transferred from the department of citizenship and immigration to that of northern affairs, a move he described as "the great leap sideways."

"I detect no signs that this reorganization was requested by Indian leaders or that they were even consulted. I am distressed that so little thought, preparation and consultation went into this reorganization."

The present system of administering services to Indians, of handling band funds and of reserve lands, are in need of an overhaul. Problems have been created by "the failure of the Crown to discharge the provisions of the treaties signed with the Indian people."
