High School Graduate's Role In The Community Discussed

ALBERTON — Cameron MacDonald stimulated a lively and worthwhile discussion at Alberton Home and School Association meeting Monday evening.

Introduced by William Cain, the principal of Prince County Vocational School, defined in clear terms what the vocational school is trying to accomplish. Among other things he said that vocational education has to do with the art and science of a trade.

He also said that in the vocational school they are trying to teach moral values—to encourage students to get what they need for themselves in life by giving a good day's work, to ask what they can give to life rather than to sit and wait and expect something to come to them.

He laid strong emphasis upon the teaching of a sense of values and also stressed the importance of a young person making his own choice of vocation.

DISCUSS COURSES — Mr. Cameron indicated that he hoped courses in agriculture would soon be available at the vocational school and it was in connection with this need and the question of what courses would be required that the very valuable discussion took place.

Mr. Cameron was thanked by Robert E. Campbell, M.A.

Prior to Mr. Cameron's address there was a panel discussion moderated by Mrs. Andrew Wells. Members of the panel were: Mrs. John Pross, Rev. David MacDonald, Rev. Gerald Steele and J.W.D. Campbell. The topic was "what should we expect of our high school graduates?"

While discussion was not allowed confined to the topic, some of the opinions expressed by the panelists were that a high school graduate should have personal discipline through habits of study, etc. and therefore be a good candidate for society.

Special Class For The Deaf

A special class in the P.E.I. Centennial Dance Festival has been set aside for members of the school for the deaf.

The reason for the special is so that the children will be able to receive better adjudication, said George A. MacDoughall, president of the festival executive.

In past years the children have been competing in general classes, this year they will be in classes specially adjusted to their needs.

The competition, which begins this morning has received 36 entries in 81 classes. Day competitions will be held in Queen Charlotte High School and night competitions will be held in Prince of Wales College auditorium.

THE FATHERS OF CONFEDERATION

Sir Adams George Archibald

It was only natural that Sir John A. Macdonald should name Adams George Archibald to the first all-Canada cabinet that took office on July 1, 1867. Archibald had been prominent at all three pre-Confederation meetings in Charlottetown, Quebec and London. So there was no surprise when he became Macdonald's Secretary of State. However, the electors of Colchester, N.S., thought otherwise and voted for Archibald's opponent in the first general election that year. It took two years before Archibald finally won a seat through a by-election.

Archibald, born in Truro, on May 18, 1814, came from a famed legal family that provided high court judges in Britain, Canada and Nova Scotia. Later in life, he too, became a judge in his home province. In the interval he had been in and out of the House of Commons and he had been the first effective lieutenant-governor of the Northwest Territories (now the three Prairie Provinces). On the death of Joseph Howe, he became lieutenant-governor of Nova Scotia and held the post for 10 years but eventually retired to re-enter the Commons in 1888. He stayed there until 1891 when ill health forced him out. He died at Halifax, Dec. 14, 1892.
