Workshop Held In Kensington

KENSINGTON — About 140 ladies from Western Queens and East Prince Counties assembled at Kensington United Church for a workshop sponsored by the Presbyterial of the United Church Women.

Mrs. Frank Cutcliffe, Fredericton, presided, and Mr. Harold Laird of Kensington welcomed the visitors.

The Presbyterial officers were introduced. Mrs. L.M. Murray, Kensington, christian education convener, and Mrs Bryor Jones, Hampton, supply and social assistance convener, reported on the special work of these committees. An administration group for presidents was led by Mrs. Charles Howatt, Victoria and Mrs. Ewan Anderson, Charlottetown: for treasurers by Mrs. W.B. Creed, Highfield and Mrs. J.S. MacLeod, Hunter River. An introduction to the handbook session was carried out by Mrs. Alexander MacKay, Kensington and Mrs. Alan Jenkins, Summerside. Mrs. T.J. Humphrey was in charge tf the literature display.

The members of the rally were divided into two groups for a period of program methods of worship led by Mrs. Charles Howatt, presbyterial president, and of Bible study by Mrs. Robert Carruthers, Kensington. It was found that these programs are a vital part of the UCW meetings and that sufficient time is necessary to bring them to a satisfactory conclusion.

Mrs. Cutcliffe supervised the question box and many timely questions relevant to this new organization were answered by several members.

The closing workshop service was conducted by Mrs. Henry Moyse, Summerside.

A social hour with refreshments served by the Kensington UCW was held in the assembly hall.

MARY HAWORTH

Readers Scorn Modern Wife For Shirking Duty

Dear Mary Haworth: Although I am a modern young housewife, I side with the crusading grandma who says the majority of today's young wives and mothers aren't being fair to their men.

They aren't doing their proper share of the work of raising a family and keeping house. More and more of their domestic chores are shirked or pushed off on the husband (usually in a whining vein).

This is particularly regrettable inasmuch as the mother, being home, has great influence on the children. When she complains about her dally tasks, don't be surprised if her children grow up even lazier.

While today's young woman is up against a more demanding social routine than her mother or grandmother had, still this is balanced out, to some extent, by labor saving devices to ease her job.

Your views (sympathetic to the young housewife) didn't really rebut the grandmother's barrage about lazy housekeeping. Father may indeed be the household king-pin, a situation that may cause all concerned to feel great; but the fact remains, it's a shame his castle isn't better kept.

The home is one of the most essential building blocks of society; and we in this nation shouldn't let the foundations crumble, meanwhile trying to justify the sorry spectacle (which I think describes your attitude). — J.S.

Dear Mary Haworth: I take exception to your contradictory reply to the grandmother concerned about a trend of our times, namely, young housewives foisting housework on husbands.

You say it is your impression that the modern man's goodhearted sharing of domestic chores is an integral part of his social companionship with his wife.

Well, I am a young wife, with a loving husband who volunteers help at home far more often than it is utilized (and we have three children); and I am impelled to join in the older's barrage about a situation that is bound, as she says to "drive love and respect out the window."

In our eight years of apartment dwelling,we have observed far too often the practice she deplores. The wife expects maintenance, affection, all the privileges of the married state, in return for which she offers her mate a home that "looks like a Kentucky mountaineer's place "— dusty, littered, unkempt, with dishes unwashed and food unstored.

Marriage is failing conspicuously in our times, and it might be well to heed the advice of an older woman, whose generation was more successful on that score than we are. I speak from profound concern for the welfare of my contemporaries.

B.R.

Dear Mary Haworth: I am not only from the Kentucky mountains but also I am a young wife and mother. Therefore I am doubly insulted by the obviously embittered comments of Mrs. H.W.

In retort may I say, I am perfectly willing to put my house up for inspection against hers, any day, even though I have three pre-school-age children and she, apparently, has nothing better to do than sit in judgment on others.

I can only feel sorry for the person at whom her barrage is aimed — especially if (as you surmise) she is on the offensive against a daughter-in-law.

Anyone who has ever had children and cared for them properly surely knows that their needs comes first, even if finicky bystanders think it more important to have a neat house.

I read your column daily and marvel at your consistent wisdom and insight. Sincerely—

W.S.

Dear Ladies: This I know: the young housewife and mother of small children, who has no help, is obliged to choose between nurturing the children's growth or being an up-to-snuff housekeeper. She can't do both simultaneously; nobody can. The so-called good housekeeper makes puppets of small children, grinding them down to minimum interference with her spit-and-polish routine— which is an appalling misdirection of effort, in my opinion.

M.H.

IDA BAILEY ALLEN

Roquefort Is Featured In A Variety Of New Dishes

IN FRANCE, dessert often consists of a cheese tray passed with crusty French bread, sweet butter and a bowl of fresh fruit in season.

Roquefort, the blue - veined cheese that is the pride of France, is featured on the cheese tray along with Camembert and Brie.

CHEESE-NUT BALLS

While visiting in France, I found French hostesses often passed cheese -nut balls with aperitifs at the cocktail hour. They are based on Roquefort cheese combined with cream cheese for mild flavor. The nuts are chopped toasted almonds or toasted blanched hazelnuts.

In the United States, we could use toasted pecans, which are plentiful and reasonable in price.

Measurements level; recipes for 6

CHEESE-PECAN BALLS

(Hors d'oeuvre or tossed salad accompaniment)

½ pound Roquefort cheese
½ pound cream cheese
2 teaspoons onion juice
½ teaspoon salt
1 cup fine-chopped pecans

Combine first 4 ingredients. Refrigerate until firm.

Shape into balls about ¾-inch in diameter; roll in chopped pecans.

Refrigerate until serving time. Makes 50 balls.

In France, veal is more plentiful than beef, and a gourmet flavorite is veal scons stuffed with Roquefort cheese and prosciutto or ham for piquant flavor.

STUFFED VEAL CHOPS ROQUEFORT

6 thick veal chops with a "pocket"
6 small slices prosciutto or smoked ham
6 thin slices Roquefort cheese, 1½ inch square
1 teaspoon seasoned salt
1 tablespoon salad oil
1 tablespoon flour
½ cup bouillon (hot)

Stuff each pocket in chops with slice of ham and sliver of Roquefort cheese. Press snugly to close pocket.

Dust with seasoned salt; then brush lightly with salad oil and dust with flour.

Layer in baking pan. Add bouillon.

Bake 45 to 60 minutes in moderate oven, 375 degrees F. Turn chops after 25 minutes. Add more bouillon if necessary.

Garnish with cress or parsley.

1 recipe Vegetable-Gel Glace (recipe follows)

Lettuce
Sour cream mayonnaise

Combine first 6 ingredients with just enough Vegetable-Gel Glace to hold them together.

Refrigerate 4 hours or until firm. Then break up with fork so vegetables glisten as though covered with ice.

Serve in lettuce nests.

Garnish with "carrot flowers" (see Chef).

Pass mayonnaise.

VEGETABLE-GEL GLACE

1 envelope unflavored gelatin
¼ cup cold water
1 cup boiling water
⅓ cup mild vinegar
1 tablespoon lemon juice
