IDEAL DOUBLES

It is a well established fact that the best penalty doubles are those based on strength in both defensive hands rather than one very strong hand and one "bust." Of course the following case does not illustrate this fact perfectly, since East could have conducted the defense more effectively, but the point is that less strength in his own hand would have simplified East's problem.

North was obviously a very vigorous bidder!

East, in doubling three notrump, hoped for a lead in one of North's suits, but West decided to open the top card of his five-card heart suit.

BURGESS BEDTIME STORIES

WHAT A NOSE IS FOR

Leave naught to chance unless you must, The foolish only chance will trust. —Mrs. Lightfoot.

The truth of this Mrs. Lightfoot the Deer learned long ago. Sometimes some things have to be left to chance, but only the foolish are willing to depend on it.

Mrs. Lightfoot had caught a faint scent. It was so faint that she was hardly sure of it. It might mean danger for her precious fawns. On the other hand, there might be no danger at all. As long as she couldn't be sure about it she was taking a chance; and that she was not willing to do.

The Merry Little Breezes had brought her that faint scent, and then had gone off in another direction. She would find them, and see if they still carried that scent, and from what place they were bringing it.

So, Mrs. Lightfoot left the twins happily wading in the water, and quietly walked away in a big circle. She found the Merry Little Breezes, and they did have that scent.

Merry Little Breezes brought a scent to all three noses. It was an unpleasant scent. What more, it gave the twins a most uncomfortable feeling. If mother had not been with them it would have been a feeling of fright.

"Do you smell that?" asked mother. "Does it give you a bad feeling?" asked mother.

"Do you think you would know that scent if you should smell it again?" asked mother.

Again the twins nodded, and one of them twitched a slender nose. "Whenever you smell that scent, make sure in which direction it is coming from, and then get away from that place as quickly as possible. That is the scent of Yowler the Bobcat, who would like nothing better than to catch one of you and eat you. Your eyes and your ears may make mistakes; your noses will not. Learn to use your noses and trust them," said mother. Then she led them away.

ready learning what their eyes were for, and what their ears were for. They were learning to see and to hear, and to know what they saw and what they heard. Now it was time to learn what their noses were for. This was a big time for a lesson.
