MARY HAWORTH Husband's Indifference Disturbing Young Wife

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am 19 and my husband is 23. We have been married 1 1/2 months and I expect a baby in January. My husband is in the service, as he was when we married. He hasn't had too much education. He says he graduated from high school, but sometimes I wonder if he is forever laughing at everybody and always telling me what to do. He orders me around as if I were a child, does not take anything seriously and wants me to wait on him hand and foot. I am employed and have to rise before 6 a. m. to get to the office by 7 a. m. I prepare breakfast, take care of his clothes and the apartment, yet he calls me lazy. He comes home and sleeps, mostly. He helps me at times but he never says "thank you" and takes me for granted. After an argument he ignores me; he won't talk things out. I wasn't feeling well one night when we were supposed to go out, and he got upset about that but had no sympathy for me. Believe me when I say I don't know why he married me. I thought he loved me, but he gets very bored and restless at home. He puts on a good act, as if nothing is wrong, when we go out. He picks me up at work but doesn't kiss me or say he is glad to see me. Am I being petty, in wanting some affection from my husband? When we argue, I am the one who makes up. Shouldn't this be the happiest time of our life? What am I doing wrong? He'll never consent to talk to our pastor. I do care; I want only to make him happy, but I can't reach him. I will appreciate your advice. (He reads your column.) C. B.

DEAR C. B.: As I get the picture, your husband married you because he hungers to belong and to be loved. And you struck him as being a loving person: Gentle, warmhearted, trustworthy, easy to live with. Also, he wanted a full-time mother-nurse-sweetheart-glamour-girl-social companion, of

ELLEN'S DIARY

The White 'Kirk' Spire Inspires Old Memories

What a strange treasure chest, we think, is the mind. And what a varied collection is stored there. Exquisite scenes otherwise lost and gone. Moonlight across a shadowy path, sunlight catching the starry tip of a spire. Faces the years have taken from us, remembered words uttered; a smile we had enjoyed, an infectious laugh that is no more... something we neglected to do, or say, a duty awaiting ahead. So much one willingly or otherwise, tucks away into the recesses of the mind.

We remember now of our weekend, the peace, the special quality of it which seems to prevail when Sunday draws near. And the serenity of the day itself.

"Now this would have been a James began at breakfast yesterday, but then let thought of the harvest fields rest for the day. How pleasant it was in the sweet of the morning. No sound in the quiet. Even the birds' twitterings were solemn and naturally there was no sound of any quarrelling!"

The white spire of the Old Kirk by this road's end, was a fine symbol yesterday of the things of the spirit, outlined engagingly against the sunny blue of the September sky; whereon passed. Chimes welcomed the worshippers. And we noticed the old maple in the churchyard was catching again the tints of the autumn in its leaves. And seeing, we recalled - but we suspect each worshipper has there his or her own thoughts.

"I guess it's not right to allow worldly thought to come to mind" - a Kirk's child of once, who revisits there on occasion, said not long ago, "but when I come to worship there, days of the former years return to me. I picture folks missing, gone from the scene. And sometimes I smile to myself over a memory that tickles me, and again I am sad that so many changes have been. And my thoughts do wander. If it is a spring day, you know, Ellen, a lovely Sunday morning with the doors left wide, I'm seeing again the Doctor's peafowls sunning themselves against that old rail fence, where Paul's and Kitty's garden was, there by the roadside. And the old-time cows on the pastures again - named animals we knew. And the farms about so pretty, and the Corner as it used to be. And I'm remembering, that in my childhood I was always so grateful that winter was gone. And it was good to be alive. In other words, if I chanced to stray from the sermon, I knew that God was in his Heaven and all was right with the world.

Folks visited us yesterday, an interesting two, blessed with a pair of homes. In winter they sojourn in a summery climate. Summer returns them happily to the farmhouse of his boyhood in a pretty island spot, "to meet again the island kin and friends" - and to follow once more "the old island paths". Presently the last summer guests will have departed, meanwhile September gives them the choice mellow days. And Autumn's bluejays bugle, and in a broken trill, that is heart-warming a robin sings at the parting, the nostalgic, "Will ye no' come back again?"

Tonight a pair of missing from the house across the lane. The one daughter has resumed her studies at University, and also gone to the mainland's Mack, her brother, to attend still another Fair. And for the radio declares that weatherwise "Tonight, there will be frost in the hollows. Tomorrow will be sunny and warmer." Until tomorrow... Diary... Good-night...

CURRIED CHICKEN CREPES CORELLI
La Quo Vadis (Adapted).
These consist of three parts: Curried chicken or capon; Bechamel Sauce and thin plain crepes in which to roll the curried chicken filling.

Crepes or French Pancakes:
Use a favorite pancake mix, enough to make 8 pancakes about 5" in diameter (follow pkg. directions). Add 1 beaten egg yolk and enough extra milk to make a batter the thickness of heavy cream. Drop the batter by generous tablespoonfuls into a large lightly oiled griddle. It will spread; the crepes will be thin. (They will be more symmetrical if cooked individually in small pans.) Fry slowly on one side about 3 min. or until browned; then turn with a pancake turner and cook on the other side about 1 min. or until golden. Keep warm on a plate over steaming water.

The recipes for Crepes Corelli calls for 3 easy sauces: a La Quo Vadis. Make them next.

SAUCE BECHAMEL
Ingredients: 2 tsp. butter; 1 1/2 tsp. flour; 1/2 c. milk; 1/2 c. meat or chicken stock; 1 egg yolk; salt and paprika.
To Prepare: Melt the butter, stir in the flour, and then slowly add the milk and stock, stirring constantly. Cook the sauce, stirring until smooth and boiling. Take a little of the sauce and beat it into the egg yolk, then stir the mixture into the rest of the sauce. Stir it over very low heat until the egg yolk thickens slightly, being careful not to let the sauce boil. Add salt and paprika to taste.

CREAM SAUCE
Ingredients: 2 tsp. butter; 2 tsp. flour; 1 c. scalded milk or cream; salt and pepper.
To Prepare: Melt the butter in a saucepan; add flour gradually. Stir continuously over a low heat for 3 min. Pour the scalded milk or cream in gradually, stirring constantly. Add salt and pepper to taste and continue to cook-stir over hot water until thickened.

CURRY CREAM SAUCE
Ingredients: 2 tsp. curry powder; 2 tsp. cold milk; 1 c. cream sauce.
To Prepare: Dilute the curry powder in the milk and add to the preceding cream sauce, which should be hot. (The amount of curry may be varied to taste.)
