Opening lead—Jack of diamonds.

This hand occurred in a pair game many years ago. At most tables the contract was four hearts and the usual result was that South was defeated a trick. West invariably led a diamond and the play that followed was the same at practically every table. South won with the ace and led the queen of hearts. West played the king and declarer took the ace and returned a heart.

When East followed with the six, South won with the ten, but declarer then went down one because he had to lose two spades, a heart and a club.

At one table declarer made four hearts. He did not lose a trump trick. He picked up the entire suit without loss. Of course, this is not difficult to do if you see the opponents' cards, but he did it without that advantage.

At trick two, after he had won the diamond, South led the ten of hearts, not the queen.

West covered with the king, having no choice, and declarer took it with the ace and led back a heart.

East followed with the six, just as at the other tables, but South now played the seven and won the trick. As a result of the deep finesse, he avoided a trump loser and wound up making four hearts.

It was not just a lucky shot by South. His lead of the ten of hearts, rather than the queen, made all the difference in the result.

South reasoned that West would not cover the ten with the king unless the king were a singleton. Suppose, for example, that West had held K-x of hearts. He would not dare cover the ten with the king because his partner might hold J-x or J-x-x, and covering the ten would cost his side a trick in either case. The same reasoning would apply if West had started with K-x-x of hearts.

On this basis, therefore, South decided that East's original holding was 9-8-6-4, and the finesse of the seven became the indicated play.
