St. Ann's Church, Hope R.
Scene Of August Wedding

St. Ann's Church, Hope R., P. E. I., was the scene of an August wedding when Joan Victoria, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Blaquiere, became the bride of Eugene Lorne Blanchard, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Blanchard, New Glasgow, P. E. I. Rev. Denis Gallant was the officiating clergyman. The church was decorated with mixed flowers for the occasion. The wedding music was supplied by two Sisters from Rustico convent. The bride given in marriage by her father, wore a bouffant floor-length gown of silk organza, with Sabrina neckline, and long tulle sleeves of Chantilly lace and a detachable train trimmed with re-embroidered Alencon lace. Her four-tier bouffant veil was of imported silk illusion held by a cluster of large roses ornamented with seed pearls. Her only ornament was a strand of pearls, gift of the groom, and she carried a bouquet of red and white roses, with streamers of rosebuds. Mrs. Gordon Gallant was her sister's matron of honour, and little Marlene Gallant was flower girl. Both wore floor-length

MARY HAWORTH Shocking Bad Manners To Ask For Gifts Back

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I may be a bit old fashioned but I think if a boy wants to dance with you he should ask of his own accord. Recently my family and I went to a country dance. There, my sisters went around asking the boys for dances. I just sat watching because I am shy. Behind my back my younger sister asked a boy to dance with me. I danced with him before I found out what my sister had done. It made me feel cheap. Shouldn't a boy ask a girl without prompting from anyone? Is it wrong of me to think this way? Sincerely, E. F. DEAR E. F.: Getting down to basics, dancing is a playful aspect of the courting game. Thus I agree with you that it seems naturally more graceful for the boys to ask the girls to dance, without prodding from anyone. In taking the lead in this respect, the lad personifies the qualities of courage, decisiveness and aggression generally admired in the male sex as properly masculine attributes. At the same time, in so doing he enables the girl to be gentle, reserved, gracious, responsive, appreciative, etc., as best become the fair sex. So I sympathize with your belief that a girl is casting herself in a disadvantaged role, in trying to corral a partner at a dance. However, one must live in the world as it is and make the best of the materials at hand. And in the boy-girl situation, most adolescent boys are inwardly unsure of themselves around girls, and especially so in respect to dancing. They want to excel if they take the floor, not only to impress the girl but also as a matter of one-upmanship in competition with other boys. Caught between their desire to shine and their fear of being a flop with all eyes on them, they tend to freeze. That is, they huddle on the side lines, feigning indifference to the ladies. In this predicament, I should think that valiantly sociable girls might be pardoned, indeed possibly admired, for barging up to the boys and saying, "Let us dance". In that case the unsure boy gathers courage from the reflection that if he heads on the girl's toes she can't really complain, since she asked for it. And in his heart he's grateful to her for taking the chance. Which reminds me that most boys won't dance with a girl who doesn't attract them on sight, no matter who's judging. So don't worry about the dance you had with a partner your sister annexed for you. He probably was pleased and encouraged by her assurances that you would dance with him if asked. An analyst friend of mine once remarked, very astutely, I would say, that the enterprising "go-get-em" girls usually lasso the nicest boys, who usually

ELLEN'S DIARY

A Cheerful Fire Sings As We Brew Our Tea

When company comes by now the summer leech give way to the cups of tea. We close the door, we have kept open since tulips first blew in the springtime, against the night, and having relit the fire, are more or less satisfied to move along with the season. James brings in to the woodbox, by way of keeping tidy the area where the piece of carpentry is, by times in progress the discarded from the project, the irregular bits and pieces of boards and scantling, for our hearth-fire. And today we made pickles over it, the recipe for which began with "you take seven medium size green cucumbers and four large onions. . . and you shred a sweet red pepper in the sauce, and. . ." And we baked an apple pie. And boiled for dinner the potatoes we had unearthed from a field-row, with a pair of little lads for our help. They, Peter and Gordie (Jamie's eldest), dug briskly with their young paws, grubbing happily to see who should discover the biggest one of all. And listening to our humble fire sing, we had neither want nor complaint over it. So this evening we closed the door against the cool of the night, and brewed us a pot of tea. . . And remembered the delight of this day with its sunshine over all. Fancied we could hear Scampie's bark welcoming in turn the trucks which came up from the field to the granary. Saw James smile. And knew that with our farming all was well. "There's no mistake, about it."

skimmer gowns, styled alike, with Empire bodices, of turquoise blue, pea de soie. Mrs. Gallant carried a bouquet of yellow and white carnations, and Marlene a basket of miniature mixed flowers. Randy Blaquiere served as ring-bearer. Rodney Blaquiere was best man and ushers were John Gram, Toronto, Ont., and Fred Blaquiere, Dartmouth, N. S., the bride's brother. For her daughter's wedding, Mrs. Blaquiere wore a pale green satin brocade suit with matching accessories and a corsage of yellow tinted carnations. The groom's mother chose a blue crepe suit with white accessories and a corsage of white carnations. The ceremony was followed by a luncheon and reception for 75 guests at the parish hall, at which Rev. Denis Gallant proposed the toast to the bride. Guests were later received by the bride's parents at their home. After a brief honeymoon, Mr. and Mrs. Blanchard left to reside in Toronto, where the groom is employed. (Photo by Crawlwell)
