Pub. Canadian Theatre Review Yearbook is the first

If west had a 5 card suit he would probably have led it so his distribution is likely to be 4-1-4-4. He would not have led his lowest club from four headed by the eight so he must have an honor. Could it be the queen? Only if declarer is a very poor player, for with 3 clubs to the ace in his hand his proper play would be the jack from dummy. Partner has the ace of clubs then and it is time to count points. Add partner's ace to the 21 points you can see and that leaves just 15 for declarer. He must have a very outstanding face card.

Clearly you must not duck the first club, or declarer will make nine tricks before you make 5. Spades cannot be attacked from your hand so, after winning the king of clubs, you must return the four of clubs to your partner's ace. Your partner will also be counting and he will realize that a spade switch is required at trick three. If your king of spades is allowed to win, you will, of course switch back to clubs.

Your partner leads the 3 of clubs and the 2 is played from dummy. How do you plan the defense?

ever attempt at documenting a year of Canadian plays. This yearbook contains a dossier of casts and credits from over seventy different Canadian companies from every province in Canada. The yearbook is filled with excellent pictures of scenes from the plays and also contains an index of all actors cross-listing all of the plays they were in. The yearbook also contains regional overviews of activity carried on and gives a brief analysis of the state of Canadian theatre.

In a field that has long been overlooked it is a delight to be able to get such comprehensive coverage of Canadian theatre. It is definitely a contradiction that in an era when Canadian nationalism is on the upsurge that something so distinctly Canadian has taken so long to be recognized.

I must say that it came as a surprise to me the depth and variety that Canadian theatre has developed. I can only hope that this yearbook will be carried on as it is definitely a worthwhile and informative project.

The price may be prohibitive to some but for anyone interested in Canadian Theatre it is a must. If you cannot afford it then why not press your local library to get it.

The Canadian Theatre Review Yearbook comes from the Canadian Theatre review quarterly. For anyone wanting to follow up the yearbook The Canadian Theatre Review is published under the direction of York Universities Fine Arts department.

comptroller. If elected Dave would try to get funds to renovate the Barn. He would put money into such things as Disco Barns, tablecloths and curtains, the latter two rily known as "Boogie Guru" feels he has several good ideas for the position of to give it atmosphere.

Dave disagrees with the proposed constitutional change as he feels that they are not relevant to our prime problem - Apathy. He thinks that a new Student Union building is not needed because it would not cure this problem. He therefore proposes that more work be done with students and less with the buildings.

In summary, Dave is confident he can do the job as he has the experience in working with people and the desire.

Treasurer

Jean MacAulay

Jeannette MacAulay is a second year Business student. She views her job as being a cornerstone of the student and as such would attempt to do as much as she can to aid the student.

She proposes several methods to make money for the student union and to make the life of the student better. She would open the Barn during the summer and make the Bookstore into a coffee shop. She feels that as a consequence of the latter, there would be more interaction between residence and day students (residence students don't like to go all the way down to the Barn.

Most importantly, she wants to see apathy reduced and in order to do this she would open up the committees and other organizations to more students.

Michael Clow

Micheal Clow is a first year Business student. He has had several seven years experience as a Sales representative and feels that as a consequence he is well-qualified for the job. As well, he was chairman of the Business Society's Entertainment Committee.

He refused to answer any questions about his platform, though, saying the whole thing would be revealed at the speeches tonight.

He did say that he is running with the best interests of the student at heart.
