ELLEN'S DIARY

Elder Daughter Of Old House Is Laid To Rest

So there this sunny July afternoon, her family and other loved ones and friends, left all that was mortal of the elder daughter of this old house, in a quiet country churchyard to her last rest of earth. Close by, leaves stirred to little rustles by a passing breeze, acacia trees were in fragrant bloom. And there in the branches after the committal service had ended and the bright red of fresh-turned Island clay was being moulded gently on the new grave a robin sang a quiet requiem.

"Listen!" Granddaughter said softly.

How expressive and reverent was the song, fitting in well with thought in volume and theme, to that green city of the dead.

It sang of leafy branches and flowery meadows, of dewy dawns and hushed dusks; of life with its joys and its sorrows, its meetings and partings.

It sang too, there above the graves of those who had more and less valiently walked life's winding trails, now leading down into the depths of shadowed valleys and again up to exciting summits of hilltops, of ancient truths written by prophet and sage. . . of death and that bourne reached across its dark flow, whence goes to the reward of the faithful of earth the spirits of the best. And of bright everlasting tomorrows to be had in eternity's land over there. It is a fair country to us, since so many who once walked earth's miles with us, and whom we have "loved and lost a while" now sojourn there.

Now sister to James is among those gone before. Spirit borne out on the quiet of the Sabbath morning tide to that harbour of no return. . . out across the thread of dark water that is Death, past that sparkling expanse where the deep blue melts into the summer blue of sky above, into safe haven. There she now dwelleth, in that land which giving ease to the sufferer, and rest to the weary, lies indeed beyond the end of the rainbow.

"Beyond the rainbow's end, there lies the land of love and light, Where shadows never dim the skies For there, . . . there is no night. And though the loss is hard to bear Of loved one, or of friend, We know that we shall find them there. . . Beyond the rainbow's end." — Diary — Goodnight. . . .

Canadian People Called Friendly And Hospitable

Mr. Thomas J. Walsh, executive general manager of the Hotel Touraine, Boston, Mass., kindly sent an article from the Boston Herald written by Hayden Pearson. It is captioned "Canadian People Are Called Friendly and Hospitable." Mr. Hayden describes places, persons and impressions of New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia.

The following are some excerpts of the article. — The next day we took the ferry from Cape Tormentine to Borden, Prince Edward Island. The ride from Borden to Charlottetown is hereby nominated as one of the most picturesque and beautiful of the trip.

I shall have more to say about Prince Edward Island, but in passing let me comment that the Island is picture postcard scenery with its neat farms laid out in squares and rectangles and the fields surrounded by evergreens.

Many of the evergreens are full grown cedars. The color contrasts with the distinctive red soil, green fields, tall hedges and scattered farm buildings make a memorable picture. Incidentally, the main roads are excellent. The trans-Canada highway across the island is an outstanding road for comfortable driving.

After we got our stories on the Island, we ferried from Wood Islands across the Northumberland Strait to Nova Scotia.

Mr. Hayden describes Wolfville, seat of Acadia University, as a most attractive place.

Mr. Hayden's article concludes in this way — The overall impression of the trip is that Canada offers a great deal to the tourist and vacationer. There is beautiful scenery. There are innumerable historical spots, beautiful parks and free museums, good roads and up to date accommodations. American tourists are coming to the Maritime in increasing numbers and I can understand why. Mr. George Fraser, director of the Travel Bureau in Charlottetown, told me that each year since the war has seen a steady increase and that this year gives every indication of being the best yet.

Fur Trim Is In the Mode

By MURIEL PENN
LONDON (Reuters)—A beautiful collection by the Queen's dressmaker, Norman Hartnell, has brought the three-day London fashion openings to a close with a grand finale.

The collection Thursday featured impeccably-tailored suits, top coats and evening clothes at once luxurious and exquisitely feminine.

Top coats in the group of models for daytime wear were teamed with suits or dress-and-jacket ensembles in toning, lighter-weight fabrics. The popularity of fur for collars and cuffs, evident all through this series of collections, was reflected also in this one.

But Hartnell's suit jackets were in the main less abbreviated than those of the other designers and there were more classic suits with waists more clearly marked, giving a much trimmer, less casual line.

Color is one of the highlights of this collection. Hartnell said: "Muted colors and black, black, black for the day clothes. Brilliant colors and black, black, black for the evening clothes."

In the late day and evening scene, color ran riot among the many black dresses. There was a beautifully-draped short evening dress in dark red chiffon called sang de bouef (beef blood), an exact description of the color, which gave the impression of being lit as air.

Finally, among a welter of black in which velvet was combined with faille, lace and chiffon, there came a magnificent full length evening coat in jade velvet luxuriously trimmed with pale grey mink and appropriately named "wicked jade."

guishes any glow of appreciation the boss might feel and express, if your behavior were cheerfully obliging in contributing the extra effort.

As to whether you can extricate yourself from this downward spiral of mutual ill will, short of quitting the job, I think that depends somewhat upon how helpful you are—how reliable, agreeable and effective—in doing the principal task from 9 to 4 o'clock. If you are top-notch on this score, and have the backbone the self-esteem and self-confidence) to reasonably maintain your right to a personal schedule, outside office hours, I think the boss might respect you more for doing so.

HELP THE BOSS

A good employe who slavishly puts up with inconsiderate hours (even reluctantly) is sometimes a temptation to a selfish boss, to be unpunctual in tackling work that must be handled jointly. Whereas, if the employe does a fair day's work and then politely but adamantly insists on the equal importance of duties in his private life and doesn't tarry to argue about it—when overtime incursions have been carried too far—he (or she) may startle the boss into a better brand of co-operation.

On the other hand, of course said employe may get fired. But O. O. MacIntyre applies. He once wrote that it had been his experience and observation that the valuable person who loses a job through no fault of his own, never fails to get a better one!
