WMS Holds Meeting At Breadalbane

Mrs. Eldon Hickox was hostess for the recent meeting of the Breadalbane Christian Church Women's Missionary Society, which was presided over by Mrs. Cuyler Matheson.

The secretary, Mrs. James Craig, was also the devotional leader, and chose as her theme "prophecy" and dealt with it under three sub-topics: "what it is", "why one should study prophecy" and "the blessings promised". Mrs. John Hickox outlined the first missionary enterprises of the Church of Christ in Brazilia, and various members participated in Bible readings and a circle of prayer.

Plans were made for the completion of a quilt, and Mrs. James Craig invited the members for the May meeting. Refreshments were then served by the hostess.

Crapaud WI Discusses Playground

A total of 13 members attended the May meeting of Crapaud Women's Institute when the president, Mrs. Frank Myers, presided. Correspondence was read and a donation of money was voted to the Junior Ladies Aid of the P.E.I. Hospital.

It was decided to sponsor a Bicycle Rodeo for children to 16 years of age. Tickets were handed out to members to sell for the opening performance of Anne Green Gables which the Institute is sponsoring in co-operation with two other institutes. A committee was appointed to see about repairs to the public library. A supervised playground was discussed and a committee appointed to find out details about same.

Refreshments were served by the committee in charge.

they are failing, mentally and otherwise, no doubt.

Also, in your childhood it was appropriate for you to take your cues from their wishes. But as of today, you must bear full authority for shaping your behavior on all fronts, including your dealing with them. And your own reasoned sense of what's fair to your husband, yourself and your parents, in that order, must be your guide.

So pull yourself together and begin again, along mature thinking lines, this time. If your parents suffer childish confused dismay at being denied their own unobstructed way with you, that's unfortunate. But letting wrongheadedness lead isn't the cure for wrongheadedness. Maybe there is no cure for them. But the self-protective partial antidote is: Be strong and wise in your own right, in promoting justice across the boards, from your side of the fence at least.

JUDGES BARRED

TORONTO (CP)—The Upper Canada Law Society has ruled that former judges will not be allowed to appear as lawyers before any Ontario court or tribunal. The society made the ruling at its April convocation and made it known to lawyers Monday. Former judges, however, may practise corporation law, become company directors and handle estates and all other forms of non-courtroom work.

MR. AND MRS. DOUGLAS MACNEVIN

Reception At Church Hall Follows April Ceremony

The marriage of Nancy Colleen Vail, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hilton C. Vail, Charlottetown and Lyle Douglas MacNevin son of Mr. and Mrs. Lyle MacNevin of Bonshaw, P. E. I. took place on Saturday, April 23 at 2:30 p. m. in St. Paul's Anglican Church.

The double ring ceremony was performed by Rev. A. E. Piercey, George Thompson, church organist, played Lohengrin's "Wedding March" as the bride entered the church.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride was in a full length gown of white satin. The bodice front was enhanced with lace and pearl appliques, and the long sleeves and full over-skirt were of white sheer. Her bouffant shoulder length veil of illusion was held by a flower shaped headress and she carried a cascade of red roses entwined with ivy. She wore a single strand of pearls, a gift of the groom.

Shirley MacNevin, sister of the groom was bridesmaid. Her dress of turquoise blue satin, was styled on Empire lines and she wore a matching flower headress. Her nosegay was of tinted carnations.

Roger Vail, brother of the bride attended the groom, and David and Clifford Vail of Yarmouth, also brothers of the bride, and Sheldon MacNevin, cousin of the groom, ushered the guests to their seats.

The mother of the bride chose a dress of powder blue with matching lace coat, and a draped hat of tulle. Her corsage was of feathered carnations. The groom's mother wore a pink knitted two-piece dress with lace front, and matching flowered hat. A grey fur stole, and corsage of white feathered carnations completed her ensemble.

At a reception following the wedding in St. Paul's Parish Hall Mrs. David Hume of Toronto, aunt of the bride and Mrs. G. Charles Sinclair of Charlottetown presided. Assisting in serving were Dianna Sinclair and Gail Proude, while Sharon Flynn circulated the guest book.

Later the newlyweds left on a short honeymoon, the bride travelling in a blue poodle cloth suit with white hat and black patent accessories. Her corsage was of pale pink carnations.

SINGS THROUGH CHAINS

LONDON (CP)—Pop singer Tom Jones, recovering from an operation on his tonsils, has to be tied up when singing to prevent damage to his voice. Doctors found his violent gyrations on stage were affecting his vocal cords. His wife now ties his arms to his sides while he practises, hoping to tone down the gymnastics.

TAKE UP A STAND

SHEPSTEAD, England (CP) The Hammonds have lived in their Leicestershire council house for five years without opening the front door. The first time Bruce Hammond tried the key, it broke, jamming the lock. He has insisted since that the municipality should replace it, while council says it is the tenant's chore.

Malpeque Couple Observes 60th Wedding Anniversary

A number of relatives, neighbors and friends gathered recently at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Stewart, of Malpeque, to celebrate with them their 60th wedding anniversary.

Mr. and Mrs. Stewart were married at Darnley by Rev. E. J. Ratee, in 1906. Mrs. Stewart is the former Selma Woodside. All the members of their family, except Matt of Charlottetown were present namely: Bruce and Earle of Malpeque; Gerald and Sherwood; (Mary) Mrs. Kenneth Owen, Malpeque; (Jean) Mrs. John MacKenzie of Malpeque, and (Doris) Mrs. Stewart Jenkins of Sherwood. Two granddaughters (Joana and Mrs. Louis Bambrick, of Charlottetown and (Helen) Mrs. Earle Jewell of Sherwood pinned corsages on the honored guests.

Willon Ramsay acted as master of ceremonies and welcomed the guests and also extended good wishes and congratulations to the couple.

Bruce and Mrs. Kenneth Owen on behalf of the family, made a presentation to each of their parents and their niece, Mrs. Ivan Darrach and her husband also presented a gift to them. Individual gifts from Mr. and Mrs. Keith Harrington and a gift from the community was presented by Mrs. Gerald Mill and Earle Taylor. Potted mums were received by Mrs. William Mills from the Malpeque Women's Institute also a gift from Keith Davison.

A sing song with Mrs. Ivan Darrach as pianist was much enjoyed by all and refreshments were served which included an anniversary cake made and decorated by Mrs. Kenneth Owen.

MARY HAWORTH

Demanding Mother Kills Chance Of Family Unity

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Please write something on how to deal with aging parents. My parents retired several years ago and came to live near us. I am an only child and we surely are glad to have them close by. That is, if only they would try a little harder not to be so demanding.

Mother expects the whole world to jump at her demands. Dad is like jelly. He doesn't have a life, other than taking mother where she wants to go and breathing "Yes dear". He says this makes him happy. He says the idea of living is having her way in everything.

She wants every free minute of mine. She invites company and, because she is elderly and ailing, I feel sorry and we end up doing the entertaining (family, mostly) for her when we don't really want to.

My husband and I have lots of friends, but little time for them any more. In other years our household was happy and I enjoyed every moment of being a wife and mother. Nowdays, I am just plain tired of trying to please, oblige, make happy, etc. When you try and find it impossible, what on earth do you do next?

Mom and Dad are near 75 and we don't think alike. Our values are so different. If I try to discuss this, their feelings get hurt, which I deplore. Why can't we all live near each other helpfully, getting along?

If I sound impatient, the fact is I really love them and truly want happiness for them. But how to give it? And why can't I have a little life of my own?

In relation to your aging parents, you are the ultimate authority concerning what your performance shall be, in the matter of adapting your intentions to their expectations.

The prime adult-age generation, which is to say, your generation, the generation in the middle, with growing children on the one hand, and aging parents on the other hand, is the generation in the saddle, in the continuing history of family relationships.

But it sometimes happens, as in your case, that the generation "in the middle," the generation scheduled to take over the often-painful obligations of top responsibility in the family hierarchy, will arrive at the summit position while still shrinking, immaturely, from the decision-making duties of the new assignment.

Your dilemma is that you had hoped, unconsciously, that having your parents live nearby, in their retirement years, would somehow restore the idyl of family togetherness that you seem to recall from childhood.

As to that, nostalgia usually plays memory false in any case. All wasn't ideal "way back when". But whatever the early reality was, your mother and dad were in their prime when you were a child, whereas today

ELLEN'S DIARY

Rooms Began To Take On A Tidy Appearance Again

A cool spell of weather we have had of late. But toward evening this day warmed. One was aware of it by the abandon with which the children lingered on at play in the yards. Now on the rope swing which hangs from the white birch on a lawn, now on the teeter set between two fencerals, then at hide-and-seek, just the pair amused and happy about. One or the other would in the quiet house-corner, or emerge from behind a bole of tree, movement-cautious, to laugh happily presently, or be obviously chagrined over being "caught".

The high wind of day had gone up the creek. It had piped the sun to the stairway which leads down behind the gilded dark of the woodlands, leaving in its wake a delightful calm. A last smile, there had been, a last play of light between the shadows on the fields, last jewels set in windows, before all was left dim. And the lads played on at their parting larks, notes a bit solemn, with the twilight spilling down over the rim of the valley. And the peace of approaching night lay then like a benediction over all the land.

Our rooms begin to take on a tidy appearance once more. Items out of place during the springtime cleaning have settled back into familiar places. One can now make his way more confidently about. We talked of this, this evening.

"Do you think, Ellen, if you were blindfold, you could find your way about? Even from room to room?" James queried. "And why not?" we chuckled. "Our apprenticeship here has been lengthy. Haven't we had time to commit things to heart?" "Yes. I too know them pretty well. But odd times when I turn out the light in one room to come in the dark of the next, even to find my way from the kitchen with all its doors, I am a little puzzled."

"It's the lights," a visiting farmer offered. "We have grown so accustomed nowadays to our every step being lighted, we just can't trust our eyes any more. When we depended on kerosene lamps indoors, or carried lanterns without, our eyes were sharp enough! They had to be, to see past the range of light" he chuckled. "But turn out the yard-lights now and it surely takes some navigating on a dark night to make your way straight to the house. It's no wonder, we welcomed the moonlight nights then!" "There was a time" James recalled, "when even on the darkest night, if on foot, I could strike every fence-post on the farm and farther. But" he shook his head, "I'm afraid I would find that something of a problem now."

Seedlings that had been coddled by the fire and outgrown their quarters, we transplanted today to flats. Peter came by. He sniffed with appreciation. "I like that scent" he smiled. "Do you know what it's like? It smells like the summertime" he said. "Seems as though there's another car come to the yard" our visitor commented at a sound in the quiet. "We are never lonely!" James nodded.
