

Welcome Back, Children, With The Grandchildren

It is fun to foretell happy events and see the fulfillment of one's prophecy within a short span of time. Such a delightful experience has fallen to my lot this summer.

Young people, I have observed, prefer distant beaches. Five years ago my friends, Mr. and Mrs. Grant were on the point of selling their charming cottage on the beach. "What's the use of keeping it now?" they asked. "For the last three years Marian and Elmer have never been around. They both have vacation jobs and after work and weekends they seem to prefer any place to this cottage. Of course it's natural at their age to enjoy parties and doings in town but wouldn't you think at least they'd invite their friends and have picnics on this beach? They have picnics, all right, but it's always somewhere else! And how they loved it here when they were youngsters! We will see less of them when they get married so much as we hate to, it's time we sold the cottage."

And this is where I turned prophet! "Now don't be in a hurry," I cautioned. Have patience a little longer. When Marian and Elmer get married and have children of their own you won't be able to keep them away from this beach or this cottage. In fact you'll probably have to build an addition! They'll remember the happy summers of their childhood and they'll want their children to have at least a taste

ELLEN'S DIARY

"Sailing Up The Clyde" Sounds Nice To Us All

Dampish in the wake of yesterday's rain, this was another morning to let the affairs of the haying lie with an unconcerned mind, and be gone to other things... be off as were the lads to fish along the stream and in their wanderings come to their "September Island" to play in the field across the creek. To find it a lonesome place today. With Granddaughter away there was no one to propose and lead in the original games which so often serve to keep all three of them busy and happy.

A treasure catch of one fish was brought home to the smallest black kitten before they gathered dessert of raspberries for dinner, a meal we were to eat in James' absence.

The farmers had gone with Rob and Jamie to their field to attend there to a late end of wedding. But when at length a nice summer-breeze roamed the slopes of the valley, and the sun shined there along the freshened greens, they returned to the mowing. We at home could still catch the sound of it from a far meadow when our world about was entering in to that hush which heralds the dusk.

Beyond the house on the hill, Mr. C's helper whistled bars from a Scottish air as he, come now to his work above the hill, loosed the team from the mow, his tune pretty on the quiet of the evening air.

"It's 'Sailing up the Clyde' we on the front verandah chucked to Jeanie at the clothe-line across the lawn. "You know... 'Sailing up the Clyde, sailin' up the Clyde. Back to Bonnie Scotland, where the old folks bide. There's a lump comes in your throat. And a tear ye canna hide. When ye're rollin' back to Scotland and your ain fireside."

"Sounds nice" Jeanie offered taking down to an arm the white pieces a woman smiles to see on a line—the small wear and interesting which makes up a small one's daily wash. The babe's airing today was up the farm-lane. And when the carriage which in its turn has served both Granddaughter and Mack before him, stopped at our door a moment it was Mack who endeavoured to acquaint him with the charms of the pup.

"Have put your hand on him" he coaxed softly holding the puppy near. "You'll like him, because he's a good dog, a little—only a baby yet, just like you."

And it is a young moon that sails now here sampan of boat with its pale gold crescent of canvas spread, along the sea of night-blue above a dusky hill. Until tomorrow... — Diary — Goodnight...

Myth Restricts Science Women

By CAROLYN WILLETT

Canadian Press Staff Writer

OTTAWA (CP)—Many women who prepare for scientific careers still find themselves hunched by a myth as they seek jobs.

The myth persists that "girls can't do" mathematics and science, states an article on Wastage of Women Scientists in the Labor Gazette, monthly publication of the federal labor department.

"Even when they (women) demonstrate their ability in these fields and prepare themselves for scientific, engineering or technical occupations, they frequently encounter employer reluctance to hire them," the article states.

A recent survey of Canadian university women's careers by the department's women's bureau found that women in science faced low salaries, slow promotion, and little or no recognition for their work.

A women's bureau official said that very often women prepared for scientific work find themselves sidetracked to clerical and administration work, with no chance to get practical experience in their own field.

The Labor Gazette however quotes extensively from an article by British author N. M. Brown of the University of Sheffield, "employers," wrote Mr. Brown, "talk unequivocally in terms of men and boys."

While there was a growing tolerance toward married women working, the professional classes seemed to find more difficulty in breaking away from tradition.

He said women are needed, but not wanted in industry where men think things are easier without the addition of women as complicating factors.

TRAINING NEEDED

However, when it comes to career choices, "the laboratory has not yet managed to compete with a typewriter for a girl's affection," wrote Mr. Brown.

There also were pressures—financial, unsuccessful academic work or desire for practical training and early employment—which led girls to leave school without adequate preparation for scientific careers.

He suggested that better school counselling, more meaningful science teaching and acceptance of the aim to achieve success in work and marriage and a career might make scientific careers more appealing.

LET'S EAT

Picnics Southern Style Avoid Last Minute Fuss

"THE kind of picnics they often have in the South suit me," observed the Chef. "All the cooking is done in advance at home. Then the food is packed in a basket, ready to eat at the picnic grounds. There is no last minute work barbecuing the meat, while everybody stands around waiting!"

"You mean the kind of picnic Southerners call 'dinner on the ground'?" I laughed.

USE A PLASTIC CLOTH

"Oh, Madame. Just spread a plastic tablecloth on the grass, put stones at the corners to weight it down. Then set out paper dishes and the food and enjoy yourself."

"OUT OF THE PICNIC basket comes a 'dinner on the ground' that needs no last-minute cooking. Baked-Fried Chicken is the feature."

"That's the kind of picnic anyone can arrange. You don't need fancy picnic equipment. An old-fashioned picnic basket, or even boxes will do. If you don't have a car, take a bus. Just be sure that all the foods are thoroughly refrigerated before packing and that they will be eaten within an hour or so."

"While we're planning a picnic dinner menu, Madame, won't you try my latest thirst-quencher?"
