Results Of War Matter For Future Historians

By REUTERS NEWS AGENCY History will find its own names for it—the war that bogged down, for the war that nobody won, the war that got nowhere.

Or—the little war that prevented the big war, the war that stopped the Kremlin.

The Korean conflict burst upon a sleeping world Sunday morning, June 25, 1950. North Koreans drove across an imaginary line shooting at South Koreans. Soon the world was fighting a major "police action."

President Truman acted swiftly and surely. Whether he was right or wrong belongs to future historians.

Two days after the North Koreans swept across the 38th parallel, Truman announced he had ordered American forces in the Far East to provide cover and support for the hard-pressed South Koreans.

At the same time, he ordered the United States 7th fleet to neutralize the Chinese Nationalist bastion of Formosa.

In a third move, the U. S. appealed in the United Nations security council for approval by the world organization.

Against Soviet protests, the UN approved Truman's action, placed direction of the war in the U. S. president's hands and called upon UN member nations to contribute troops.

On June 30 the U. S. announced it was sending troops to Korea. The bridge had been crossed. The U. S., for better or worse, was committed to the hill on an Asian peninsula which only five months earlier had been described by State Secretary Dean Acheson as of little strategic value.

Canada's main contribution was a brigade of approximately 5,000 men, three naval destroyers and a squadron of RCAP transport aircraft for an airlift across the Pacific.

The Canadian brigade first saw action in May, 1951, and has been there ever since, though its original battalions have long since returned home, being replaced by a rotation system.

What has been the cost of it all? An estimate in May put military casualties, including those sustained outside actual battles, at 2,303,500. The anti-Communist alliance sustained 406,542, including 320,117 killed and wounded.

Other casualties include prisoners and missing. UN command estimates placed the Communist battle casualties at near 1,300,000.

The U. S. has reported 24,119 dead, 100,665 wounded; South Korea had 183,727 killed and wounded, Britain 565 dead and 1,921 wounded, and the other allies had 1,965 killed, 7,135 wounded.

A Canadian casualty list issued July 22 reported army totals at 1,499 including 291 dead, 1,006 wounded, 26 missing, 95 injured in action and 18 captured. The navy reported three dead and three injured in action and the air force one missing.

Early this year, when the warfare was static, it was calculated that the U. S. was spending $2,500,000 on the war, not counting the normal upkeep of the troops.

Bombing and the ground war has left the peninsula in ruins. North Korean towns and communications are wrecked; in South Korea 10,000,000 people are homeless. It is said that 4,000,000 people in South Korea alone died because of the misery which came with the war.

Korea, an ancient empire which fell under Japanese rule until the end of the Second World War, was left divided by the Allied victory in 1945. Uneasy peace, punctuated by a series of incidents, reigned between the north, under Communist domination helped at first by Russian occupation, and the south, which looked to American support.

Kim Il Sung, Communist north-land prime minister, had a territory of nearly 50,000 square miles, bordering in the north on China and the Soviet Union. About 10,000,000 people lived there.

Southern President Syngman Rhee, who has proved a determined opponent of any settlement which leaves Korea divided, had a territory of about 37,000 square miles with a population of just more than 20,000,000, including the historic capital of Seoul.

First Canadian Operation New Surgical Technique

TORONTO CP — The first "low body temperature" surgery in Canada has been performed on a Vancouver woman suffering from a rheumatic heart disease.

Dr. W. G. Bigelow of Toronto told Friday of the operation on Mrs. Doris Sleeman at the Toronto General Hospital and said it ended six years of research and experiment.

Dr. Bigelow said Mrs. Sleeman's heart was in a state of "failure" and was not supplying enough blood to carry oxygen to all parts of the body.

In the new technique, the body temperature is lowered by wrapping special cooling blankets around the patient. The chilling process, by slowing down the basic metabolic rate, slows down the rate at which the body requires oxygen.

This allows for the exclusion of the heart from blood circulation and permits surgery on the heart under direct vision. In Mrs. Sleeman's case her temperature was dropped from 98.4 to 86 degrees. Normal body temperature is 98.4 degrees.

Complicated Equipment

More than 15 persons handled the complicated equipment and performed the surgery. In the actual operation, Dr. Bigelow, who pioneered research in the new field, opened the mitral valve of the woman's heart and cleared an obstruction that had hampered the free flow of blood.

Gives Name To Disease

TORONTO, (CP)—A small Toronto boy has the doubtful honor of having a disease named after him.

Six-year-old Stephen Christmas was at first thought to have hemophilia, a disease of the blood. After an investigation by doctors from Toronto to Capetown, South Africa, it was discovered Stephen's condition was unique in medical history.

He had a variation of the disease which causes easy and hard to stop bleeding.

Doctors named it Christmas disease and in recent months other cases have been discovered, including a whole family in Quebec City.

Stephen is the son of pantomime and radio star Eric Christmas.
