GUARD THE LITTLE ONES.

Is Your Child Afflicted With Chorea or St. Vitus' Dance?

If So, Use Paine's Celery Compound.

It Cures That Dread Disease.

If your child is fretful or listless, or if it complains of headache, dizziness, chilliness, palpitation of the heart, you may expect Chorea, or St. Vitus' Dance. When your child shows the premonitory symptoms of this disease use the proper medicine at once. Do not wait until the little one becomes helpless. If the fretful, restless, nervous symptoms are not regarded, involuntary movements and spasms will soon follow. The muscles of the face will be so affected that the patient will scowl, laugh, wink and grind the teeth, and chewing and talking will be almost impossible. Madness or idiocy follow later on. There is but one remedy that is uniformly successful in curing St. Vitus' Dance; it is Paine's Celery Compound, Dr. Phelps' great discovery. Fathers and mothers who are entrusted with great responsibilities should not wait until the disease assumes a dread form; duty demands the use of the medicine that has cured thousands of little ones in the past. An early use of Paine's Celery Compound will banish every form of danger and restore any child to perfect health and strength.

Testimonial

C. P. Fletcher, Esq.

DEAR SIR,—I do not wish to return to Montreal without expressing my gratitude to you for the very excellent Bell Piano that you placed at my disposal for my recital. I have tried many Canadian Pianos of different manufacturers and must say that, considering the size of the instrument, I have never found one to equal it for depth and brilliancy of tone. The action is quite as elastic and responsive as in American Upright Pianos of the highest grade. Again thanking you, very sincerely,
I remain,
Yours,

A MAIDEN'S PRAYER.

She prays for me, her sweet voice hushed and faint,
A yearning look within her eyes so meek,
A touch of color on her soft, fair cheek,
Her lips a tremble, hands crossed like a saint
That artists in a God sent vision paint,
Around her head the glory of her hair
On which the sunlight falls in touches rare,
A maiden pure, without an earthly taint,
She prays for me!

I fear to gaze, she seems so far above
The wretched earth on which I toss and groan.
I fear to speak lest I should wake alone
And find her gone, with all I prize and love,
And yet the name she murmurs is mine own.
She prays for me!

IN NO MOOD FOR READING.

Pessimistic View of Several Familiar and Pleasing Occupations.

Mr. Blykins was looking out into space in silence when his wife found him.
"Haven't you anything to read?" she inquired.
"Nothing whatever," he replied with a great deal more solemnity than the occasion demanded.
It was plain that he was in a deeply pessimistic mood, from which it was desirable to win him, if possible.
"Here is a newspaper," she ventured.
"I've tried newspapers," he returned.
"I don't want any. I haven't found one of them that doesn't say something with which I don't agree. I'm tired of having my opinions affronted two or three times in every column."
"Perhaps you'd like a novel. I bought a new one, and it's very interesting."
"I don't want any novels either. Every one of them is tinged with false ideas of life. They're libels on human nature. The modern novel is nothing more than an irresponsible caricature!"
And he glared at his wife as if it were her fault.
"Perhaps you'd like me to bring you a history from the library?"
"History!" he repeated contemptuously.
"What are the data with which historians work? The mere flatteries of subsidized sycophants of power! How do we know that two-thirds of the history we read isn't merely a reflex of the political prejudices of defunct chroniclers? I have no doubt that many of the men who wrote about the prominent characters of the past were ready to hold office if they got the chance."
"A large number of them did receive incomes from the government. And you know as well as I do that a man who is looking for office is seldom qualified to sit back in the jury box of literature and take a calm, impartial view of current events."
"Well," his wife rejoined, somewhat exasperated, "here's a book that I can commend to you. It isn't very interesting, but it tells indisputable facts in a cold blooded way that ought to satisfy even your suspicious nature. I don't like to see you with your mind in utter idleness, and if I were in your place I'd sit down and read the city directory."
He took the volume and languidly turned over some of the leaves.
"No," he said, handing it back. "It's like all the rest. There's a man who used to be a bunao steerer who is referred to in this book as Mr. Green. A colored man of my acquaintance is put down as Mr. White."
"The most inveterate bicycle rider in the city is described as 'Walker,' and a citizen alluded to as 'Black' is, to my personal knowledge, an albino. It's no use, Maria, I can't rely on anything I see in print."
And he heaved another sigh and proceeded to look once more into vacancy.—Washington Star.

The Englishman's Tongue.

The English language is not regarded with affection by the people of the European continent who are under the necessity of learning it. Its diverse origin has laden it with an immense number of inconsistencies, contradictions and duplications and, above all, with an irregular and inexplicable system of spelling. The Germans are accustomed to speak of the English language as "a monster having two mouths, with one of which it speaks German and with the other Latin."
The Slavonic people of central Europe, who have always had occasion to master many languages and who for that reason are good linguists, have a story to account for the inconsistencies of English which is still more uncomplimentary to our mother tongue.
This story, which we find in "The Outgoing Turk," by H. C. Thomson, tells that when the Lord made the different nations he gave men no tongues at all, and when they came and dumbly begged for them he compassionately took a piece of meat and cut it into slices, giving each one a slice to serve as a tongue.
This served well enough, but when the meat was all given away the Englishman, who had either lazily or contemptuously failed to come sooner, arrived and demanded his piece. There was none left for him, and so the lord called back the men of the other nations, and, slicing from each one of their tongues a little bit, he put them all together to make a tongue for the Englishman, and this is why the English continue to speak in such a jumble to the present day.
This story, which the author of the book named heard in Croatia, is so close a representation in allegory of the actual fact of the origin of the English language that it has a made up air. It is nevertheless picturesque and interesting.
