

Toronto Business Clinic Would Study Springhill

TORONTO (CP) — A Toronto business clinic of retired senior executives wants to take a team of experts to disaster-stricken Springhill to study what type of industry would help put the town on its feet again.

J. D. Thomas, K. N. M. Morrison and A. B. Turner, who operate the Board of Directors Service, say they want to undertake the study as soon as possible and will try to raise $6,000 to pay a team of experts.

Mr. Thomas said "up to now all the money that has been subscribed has been for relief of the stricken families. It is now time for the next step."

"All we want is our expenses and money to pay for the half dozen people we take with us to Springhill."

OTHER WAYS

He said: "We do not believe Springhill is finished. . . . Mines aren't the only way to make a living."

The clinic was formed only a short time ago to offer advice to small businesses that need help. All the retired senior executives on the clinic are successful men who want to do something with their retirement.

Mr. Thomas said: "So-called ghost towns are all too prevalent in many parts of Canada and I think we can succeed in a whole or partial solution of the Springhill problem if we establish techniques and forms of research that may be used in other communities faced with the threat of starvation and misery."

Coal mining is Springhill's main industry and with the closing of the last of the four Cumberland mines most of the town's labor force has been thrown out of work.

Suggests Radical Change In Canada's Income Tax Laws

By TOM WILLIAMS
Canadian Press Staff Writer
WINNIPEG (CP) — A radical change in Canada's income tax law that would permit business to determine deductible expenses by any accounting method they thought reasonable was suggested Saturday by an economic expert.

Prof. W. G. Leonard of the Queen's University school of commerce, Kingston, Ont., said the federal revenue department now tells businessmen what accounting methods they may use, basing decisions on the letter of the Income Tax Act. This system often proved unreasonable in dealing with individual circumstances.

Prof. Leonard made the proposal during a closed panel session of the Canadian Tax Foundation's annual conference here. The three-day conference, attended by some 400 lawyers, chartered accountants and other fiscal experts, ended Saturday.

E. B. Fairbanks, Montreal lawyer and chairman of the panel, reviewed its proceedings after the session ended.

BOARD OF EXPERTS

Under Prof. Leonard's proposal a special board of accounting authorities would be established to determine whether individual accounting methods were reasonable in cases of dispute. He said these experts would be better qualified to judge accounting matters than would a regular court judge.

He said court decisions based on law and precedent are not always reasonable. Taxpayers got the actual word of the law rather his stand was attacked by Prof. F. E. LaBrie of the University of Toronto law school on grounds it was untried. The present system, while perhaps not the best possible, worked quite well in practice.

Mr. Fairbanks said he personally was "not a bit in favor" of the proposed change. He said it would have an extremely complicating effect because "there would be numberless disputes over whether methods were reasonable or not."

N.B. Government Backs Ousted Police Officers

FREDERICTON (CP) — The provincial government has told the New Brunswick Police Officers' Association it will do everything possible to assist it in its efforts to reinstate two police officers dismissed by the Woodstock town council last month. Gordon Robinson of Fredericton, president of the provincial association, said he had received a letter in reply to one sent to the Premier and Minister of Labor.

In the letter to the Premier, as she appears in a feathered hat at the consecration of St. Mary's Newington church, in London. The princess laid the foundation stone last summer for the rebuilt church, bombed during World War II.

Mr. Robinson, on behalf of the association, requested the government to give their utmost consideration to the Labor Relations Act as it affects civic employees, where the employer must declare itself an employer by resolution before civic employees local unions can be certified.

In Woodstock the local union is not recognized by the town council.

Mayor T.L. Everett said the council was not likely to change its mind regarding the recognition of the union, noting that under the Labor Relations Act the town did not have to become employers of labor.
