

Electronic And Missile Engineers Flock To U.S.

By DAVE McINTOSH
Canadian Press Staff Writer
OTTAWA (CP) — Exodus of hundreds of Canadian electronic and missile engineers to the United States has begun, industry sources said Tuesday.
 One authority said there isn't a doubt that Canada will lose hundreds of these men to the U.S. The government last month killed two major Canadian defence projects: The Sparrow air-to-air missile and the Astra armament control system for the supersonic Arrow jet interceptor. It postponed until March a final decision on whether to put the Arrow into limited production.
HEAVY BLOW
 Spokesmen for industries affected said the government decision was a heavy blow.
 "This had been followed swiftly by another blow: Manpower 'raids' into Canada by U.S. companies."
 Officials of several companies said American firms have sent teams to Toronto, Montreal, Hamilton, Ottawa and other centres to recruit Canadian engineers and technicians.
 One authority said the Canadian companies are finding it almost impossible to hang onto their engineers because they can't pressure them to fit their training and experience in electronics and missiles.
SEEK AGREEMENT
 They said the government has announced it hopes to work out production sharing between American and Canadian industry in the defence field.
 But, they said, there was little prospect of this until American industry received more defence orders than it could handle. And U.S. industry had not reached this point.
 Canadian companies with parent firms in the U.S. have started transferring personnel to the U.S. plants.
RCA HIT
 Firms hardest hit include RCA, Canadian Westinghouse, Canadaair Limited, Computing Devices of Canada and Canadian Marconi.
 RCA had been on the verge of going into production of the Astra and had gathered together a production team at the urging of the defence production department. At least 13 major sub-contractors were involved in the project.
 Now, a spokesman said, the company is receiving inquiries from American firms as far south as Texas about hiring RCA personnel.
 A spokesman for another company said U.S. firms are quickly cashing in on the Canadian government's decision and that his firm is desperately trying to hang onto its trained men in face of juicy American salary offers.

Four Priests Ordered To Leave Parishes

SAIGON, South Viet Nam (Reuters)—The Viet Nam press agency reported Tuesday that authorities in Communist North Viet Nam had ordered four Roman Catholic priests, including one Canadian, to leave their parishes immediately.
 The agency identified the Canadian only as Abbot Paquette, whose parish was near Hanoi. It gave the names of the other priests as Msgr. Jacques, Abbot Nordoux and Abbot Gilbert but did not give their nationalities.

At Ottawa Redemptorist fathers identified Rev. Denis Paquette, a Canadian missionary, as one of four Roman Catholic priests reported ordered by the Communists to leave their parishes in North Viet Nam.

Rev. Maurice Letourneau, superior of the Redemptorist monastery at nearby Aymer, Que., said Abbot Paquette is about 45 and a native of Coaticook, Que., who has been in Indochina since 1935.
 He said Father Paquette, who has not returned to Canada in 23 years, was superior of St. Aphonse Monastery at Thai-hap, a suburb of Hanoi, where he was ordained some years ago.
 Father Letourneau said there is one other Canadian redemptorist father at the monastery—Rev. Thomas Cote, about 63, of Quebec City, who has been in Indochina continuously since 1929.

Many Problems Face New Pope

By WILLIAM ROSENBERG
VATICAN CITY (Reuters) — A host of major problems face Angelo Cardinal Roncalli of Venice on his election as the 262nd pope.
 They ranged all the way from the pressure of communism to a lack of clergy in the far-flung realm of the Roman Catholic Church.
 Appointments to senior church offices must be made. In the opinion of some observers, the big task of overhauling the central government of the church may be launched by the new pontiff even before his coronation as John XXIII.
 On communism, Pope John must decide whether to apply his church's unequivocal condemnation of this atheistic movement on the practical political plane—or follow a more elastic policy in Communist countries where there might be a chance of co-
