We Take For Granted All The Pleasant Things

"I like the Saturdays," Mack said. "Only" he added with a rueful chuckle "there's no last to them at all!" Granddaughter laughed. "It depends on what one does she offered. We had been as far as Mr. C's house on the hill, to enjoy a TV program there, and now we were returning home in the pleasant dimness of this starlit March night. The nice mildness of the day was already changing to a frostier air, one which nipped a bit the nearer one came to a bridge or millstream—that "white frost" so sparkling and pretty in the early sun of the morning on twig and all about.

Perhaps it was because the night seemed so vast and a little eerie to the late one maybe it was his concern for our well-being along the indifferent trail, that nestled his hand in ours as we walked. Granddaughter, unaware of the night since a little girl followed in our wake. We stopped a moment at the laneway-bridge to hear in the hush of the hour, the music of the open stream as it flowed dark and quiet down towards the mill below. A truck passed, the sound shattering for a time the pleasant stillness, lights bright before it as it went on to climb the hill outward bound to the Highway. The children down to rink," Mack said, recognizing quickly the little truck in the dimness. "I'd be too tired anyway to go," he commented dismissing the thought with content. "Besides I was skating most of the afternoon," he added. His day had been full, as was hers. She is her mother's surprisingly capable assistant at some of the cares of the household. She can, of course, spread the table and later gather up and wash the dishes though quite naturally the latter is not among her favorite chores. She likes to manage a cake-mix and make the frosting to top it. She enjoys too to dust and tidy a room, and is altogether of much assistance to her mother and the rest of the family in the helpful choring such youngsters can do.

Protective Diet The Answer To Weight Control

By IDEA JEAN KAIN
Going on the theory that good news travels fast, one might think that if the scientifically planned protective diet is such a boon to overweight, the news would spread with the speed of gossip. Unfortunately, this happens only if the diet is sensational. To begin with, there is always a "time lag" between scientific discoveries and popular acceptance of the findings. But with diets, there is a more obvious reason. Most overweight people are looking for some magic way to reduce. A protective plan will simply bore you—if you want something to do the reducing for you! Time and again a letter begins . . . "I reduced 20 pounds by taking pills . . ." I know from experience that the letter will continue in this vein. "But, alas, I gained it all back." Here's a typical letter: "I am 5'2", weigh 175 pounds and wear size 16 1/2. I would give anything to lose 45 pounds. By taking pills I lost 20 pounds . . . but promptly gained it all back." Ah, how different a letter which starts out in this way: "I finally made up my mind to get down to normal weight, and set about changing my food habits."

SUCCESS SURE
Again from experience, I know that this reducing story will have a successful ending. For example, a successful dieter writes: "If fat people would only learn about food they would not find it so hard to lose weight. I have lost 50 pounds in seven months just by following your protective plan of eating. I did not take pills." Another successful dieter reports: "To the many, many gals who think they can't reduce, I know from experience it can be done! I finally made up my mind to stick with a scientifically planned reducing diet. On February 21 last year I went to my doctor for a check-up and he advised me to lose weight. On your Take Your Choice Diet I reduced 50 pounds, from 189 to 139 in five months. I am 49. I feel wonderful, and never intend to be overweight again." Why does the scientifically planned diet have it all over faddy diets? Since the protective diet is deficient in calories only, it provides perfect nutrition. Just as important as helping you reduce, educate your food habits, scientific dieting leads to weight control once the pounds are lost.

THE EXPERTS SAY

Subtle Seasoning Is The Secret Of The Culinary Art

By CAROLYN WILLET
Canadian Press Staff Writer
Ottawa (CP)—Subtle seasoning is the secret of culinary success, say home economists in "Canada's Kitchen." Experts in the agriculture department's consumer section compare a cook's touch of spices or herbs to the dab of perfume which completes feminine attire. Both have a rather secret fascination and an individuality. Emeretene Rousseau, a French-speaking home economist at Canada's Kitchen, says French Canadians tend to use more herbs than spices in their cooking. "We're not crazy about spices . . . we use a little cinnamon or clove and we like nutmeg," Miss Rousseau said in an interview.

CAREFUL TOUCH

But whether you use herbs or spices, "use very little," says this expert. Herbs, for instance, should never be used by the teaspoonful. A sprig, or a pinch, is the subtle measurement of seasoning—just enough to impart the flavor of the food and not the seasoning. "And use your imagination," says Miss Rousseau. If the cupboard is bare of savory, try sage or something else—you might discover a delightful new secret cooking weapon. "Season to taste" is a good rule to learn, say consumer section experts. They suggest starting with familiar spices and herbs and gradually working up to larger collections and new combinations. GOOD COMBINATIONS Canada's Kitchen has prepared a list of seasonings and their uses. Try cinnamon with stewed dry fruits, blueberries, chocolate sauce and with whipped cream for gingerbread; nutmeg with candied parsnips, asparagus, cauliflower and spinach; celery seed with coleslaw, sauerkraut and kernal corn. Ground cloves go with curried beets and creamed onions; harry powder with cream of chicken or celery soup and devilled eggs; oregano with tomatoes, lamb or pork, eggs, cream cheese; basil with tomato soup, salad, broiled tomatoes, green peas. Then there's marjoram for lamb, string beans, peas; savory for hamburger dishes, pea soup; poultry; thyme for veal, pork chops, stew and soup. Paprika can pep up fried chicken, pork chops, corn on the cob and fish, while caraway seed combines with cheese, hot buttered red cabbage and sauerkraut.

DANCE DRESS

The floor-length evening gown is very much at home in the ball-room these gala nights, but please don't sell the short-skirted dance dress short. It still has a host of admirers and every designer has included it for spring. Roxanne has created this handsome number. It is a dress that is not only short of skirt but covered up as well, and yet is beautifully beguiling and ever so youthful. It is fashioned of brown woven dotted net with a high-wrapped outer-bound of green and chartreuse satin.

Grooming Is A Style That Never Changes

By ELEANOR ROSS
Fashions may change all they like from one season to another, but good grooming remains a prime essential. A young career woman is a stand-out when it comes to good grooming. She knows that, without it, no matter how right her clothes may be, she isn't equipped to face the world properly. The beauty knows this, too, and likes to appear before her admirers looking immaculately fresh. MATURE WOMEN
Stories report the mature woman's interest in grooming at an all-time high, and this goes for both the housewife and the career woman. Equally pleasing is the news that more and more teenagers are sprucing up, too, renouncing the messy look in favor of the freshly-scrubbed one. Altogether, it looks as though it's going to be a better-looking world all around. GOOD BUSINESS
Good appearance is good business. Pretty clothes, of course, can do a lot for any woman, but to really show off a nice wardrobe, the wearer should present a clear skin, with cosmetics skillfully applied and not slathered on. No matter the hair style, the hair must be shining-clean. Same goes for hands and nails.

MR. AND MRS. LEON (JAMES) B. DOUCETTE OF SOUTH RUSTICO, CELEBRATE THEIR 60TH WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

CELEBRATE 60th ANNIVERSARY

Mr. and Mrs. Leon (James) B. Doucette of South Rustico, celebrated their 60th wedding anniversary on February 9, 1957. By a special permission, they had the honor and the privilege of having a Mass celebrated for their intentions in their own home at 7.30 in the morning by the pastor, Reverend Father J. LeClair, the pastor of St. Augustine's parish. This was a unique event in the parish to have Mass celebrated in a home. Members of the family and neighbors were glad to unite themselves to the ceremony. The Sisters of St. Augustine's Convent were present to sing hymns during Mass. Breakfast was then served to relatives and friends. Mrs. Doucette who is 84, has been inactive for a number of months but Mr. Doucette, although 85, is still in good health.

They have six children living namely: Raymond, on the home-stead; Theodorice Louis, at home; Bruno, South Rustico; Mrs. Ed. Gallant, Montreal; Mrs. John Shay, Boston; John, in Montreal. Among the deceased children are Sister St. Eugenie des Anges, Congregation of Notre Dame; Helen, Raymond and Winnifred. In the evening about thirty-five persons gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Doucette to enjoy their best wishes and to enjoy a social evening. On behalf of the neighbors and friends, Mr. Stanislaus Doiron read an appropriate address and gifts were presented by Mr. Cornelius Doucette. After some entertainment, a delicious lunch was served.

LINES LONG

Sure, the short-jacketed suit is very much in evidence this season but the suit with the longer jacket isn't doing badly at all. Many very fashion-wise women are addicted to the longer lines and for them the leading designers turn out simply beautiful suits. Edith Small does one of these and for it has chosen a golden beige wool twist, the silhouette given extra emphasis by a three-tone horizontal inset banding. Low-placed flap pockets further emphasize the style.
