ELLEN'S DIARY

Folks Enjoy At Leisure The Peaceful Countryside

For us, there continues to be an unending charm in the sight of a driving-wagon in the yard. Several times today, that which carried our carpenter to Alderides, thrust itself into our view, past this and that fine visiting car, which it neighbored.

"Now" Mack said at length, that is ride enough for this time. I have to get on with the thing. "And I've loved him!" Alex said, getting down with obvious regret.

There were showers today. And no sign of a rainbow clearing this evening. But the crops are being refreshed, and the gardens. The plants in the flower-border seemed actually to grow taller in the dampness. The delphiniums reached up, the dahlias, and a pretty pink lupin, clear-washed and fresh.

The small Scotch roses of James' mother's planting, she carried when a bride from her childhood home by the Strait in this inland farm, are in bloom, the pinky-white blossoms in the fragrance of the rose-wood. We saw Granddaughter in passing, bend down a twig today to catch the fragrance of the rose-wood so sweet.

It is raining now. Hear it. He called it a rumble in the summer leaves, past our window? Granddaughter comes to the door of our "sanctum."

"They" she smiles, nodding to the kitchen where James and the carpenter chat "look to be hungry. Let's make a sandwich, shall we?" And between them a cup of tea.

Until tomorrow — Diary — Good-night.

MARY HAWORTH

Divorced Man Is Selfish Says Ayrington Victim

Dear Mary Haworth: I am a divorced man, living alone. While visiting friends, (a young married couple) I was seeing my folks that evening.

Then I added that I wasn't looking forward to it, as I had seen them just a few days ago. Her and I felt that we didn't have that much to talk about. If my parents had their way, I would be back living with them.

My friend's wife gave me a lecture, saying my attitude was wrong; that I should see them more than twice a week, etc., as I am all alone.

The longer we argued, the guiltier I felt. She is very close to her family and I am convinced she has two children, a good husband and a happy life, which I would give up if she is right and I am too independent. I would like your opinion. Thank you very much.

Dear A.M.: I think the lady was talking to her herself, as the phrase is. She was lecturing you to persuade herself (or perhaps her husband) that her conduct would be justified. This is a parents' company in a kind of berserk virtue, when in fact it equates being over-protective.

As for your casual remark that triggered her outburst, I am sure it's true that you actually don't have that much to talk about with your parents.

The fact that you are divorced suggests that you have difficulty trying to achieve a good interpersonal relationship. Your reasoning didn't acquit you with, or prepare you for, a relationship of this kind.

To be really close to anybody suggests that you have difficulty trying to achieve a good interpersonal relationship. Your reasoning didn't acquit you with, or prepare you for, a relationship of this kind.

WI Convention Hears Talk By P.E.I. Music Director

"Music and the Life of a Child" was the title of the address given by Christopher Glehill, P.E.I. Music Director, as guest speaker for the recent Women's Institute convention held in the auditorium of Mount Herbert orphanage.

Music is a great moral builder, the speaker said, and traced the place of music in the child's life through the home, school and church. There is a great heritage of music, and its effect is evident in the joy of achievement and in the sense of accomplishment.

Routine business was conducted and the matter of inadequate directional road signs was discussed, as well as the Lobster Carnival and other projects.

Mrs. Laird invited the members of the committee to a sale at the Handicraft Centre in Kensington.
