ELLEN'S DIARY

Dusk Was Commencing To Fill The Deep Valley

"Did you write Tests when you went to school?" Alex, the eight-year-old from the house across the lane, queried into our quiet afternoon. We were spreading the supper-table at the time, setting out the service for the pair and the bread and other foods. Mindful to include the extra slice, the added cookies or piece of cake, in the event that a youngster in passing should fancy a helping.

Alex had been reading in the old armchair, leaning over the day's papers, absorbing what knowledge therefrom and in what lines we could only conjecture, because children pick up the same, like honey-bees their sweets, from many an unsuspected source and in various ways. While Peter when visiting us finds no dearth of subjects to discuss and often chuckle over, Alex is, by nature, not so talkative, but thoughts run deep for his years. These being a current interest in school, tests were on his mind.

"Sometimes" we replied, "though, as we recall it, not regularly when we were in the Primary Department, though it was a practice in the Primary room. As junior, we had lady teachers, but generally it was a 'Master' in the senior grades. 'What were they like?' he inquired. 'The Masters? Oh, not too much appreciated at the time' we chuckled. 'More or less suffered then, but afterwards, in the hindsight, these were quite remarkable men ... Odd times, the Inspector of their permission. I am going to convert anyway. It is something I have to do. Please take time to consider my problem. I need your help. T. R.

DEAR T. R.: If you are dependent upon your parents' support for food, lodgings, clothing, schooling expenses, etc., while pursuing your basic education you aren't in a prudent position to stage a dramatic revolt against their overall rule of your life, at this time. And prudence is one of the Christian virtues.

If your parents were willing to give permission for you to leave the church of their choice and openly 'convert' to the neighboring faith of Catholicism, there would be no problem, of course.

But as you are anxiously opposed to the idea, thinking you aren't mature enough to know your own mind for sure, my theory is that there can be no harm in waiting, generously, until you are old enough to take full responsibility for your decisions.

When would that be? Well, after you've finished your formal schooling and are equipped, presumably, to be financially self-supporting if necessary. As you are now in high school, with some years of college study ahead, I hope, you may have filial warrant to defer your own independent solution of the 'faith' conflict until you are, say, age 23.

As for what effect, for better or worse, that this discretionary delay may have on the operations of God's grace in your experience, from the theologian's view, that is a subject for you to canvass firsthand with your most trusted religious consultants.

However, it is an article of Christian faith that Jesus, in His person and in His teachings, is 'the way, the life and the truth' for those who seek to know God. And as a follower of Christ, your own aim, in the words of St. Paul, and with the help of the Holy Spirit, 'is to cultivate within yourself the mind that was in Jesus, I take it.

And judging from Scriptural glimpses given, notably of His parents finding Him in the temple and taking Him home after He had been lost to them for three days, and His transforming the water into wine at the Cana wedding, at His mother's urging - judging by these glimpses, Jesus was filially amenable to His human parents' direction, until He finally authoritatively launched out independently on His teaching mission. Schools in that area would drive by, by horse and wagon on his regular visits - strangely enough we can't remember any winter calls! He was a big Scotsman, quite handsome as a younger man in a dark way, we would reflect, but by then he had gained considerable weight. "What do you remember of his visits?" "Nothing. Period. Only that a silence like that at a wake descended on the classroom. We were so awed by his presence, it is doubtful if we shy younger ones could have spelled 'Cat' if he had asked us!" Alex nodded, smiled. He enjoys tales of days gone. History is a favorite to read.

"And occasionally the Superintendent of Island Schools - the great man himself, when in the neighborhood, came by. He was a smallish Scot, with bushy grey hair and beard, and an accent which was difficult to follow. He wore a white shirt, a wide dark tie, black trousers and a matching swallow-tailed coat. He had a nice smile, and his sharp eyes held a puckish twinkle. In fact even yet when we picture the little folk: the pixies, that man comes to mind. ... Dusk was commencing then to fill the deep of the valley, down where now the bare alders mark time by the stream. T. white hills above were gently dimming. Supper might come this overcast evening by lamplight.

"Well" Peter said presently, breezing in, cheeks pink from the out of doors, James in his wake. "We have all our work done! No more till after supper" he smiled.

Lights go off now along the valley. Houses nestle down. Another winter day is done. Until tomorrow - - Diary - Good-night....

Fish Chowder With Milk Old New England Treat

Fish has always been plentiful in New England. And as soon as cattle were raised and milk became plentiful, the early settlers made their fish chowder with milk, for a hearty meal at noon or evening.

When a substantial milk chowder is served as a first course today, the main dish can be light, as in the menu in this column.

Fixed for luncheon or supper, the nourishing New England fish milk chowder is a grand dish in itself, served in a big tureen and ladled into bowls.

Measurements level; recipes for 6 to 8

NEW ENGLAND FISH CHOWDER
1/4 c. butter (stick)
1 c. thin-sliced onion
1 c. cubed raw potato
1 c. sliced, peeled
1/2 lb. water
2 tsp. salt
1/2 tsp. pepper
1 (1 lb.) pkg. frozen haddock, thawed and cut into 1" cubes
3 c. milk
1/2 tsp. leaf rosemary
1/4 tsp. leaf thyme
1 c. half 'n' half (milk and cream)
2 tbsp. flour

Melt butter; add onion, potato, carrot, water, 1 tsp. salt and pepper. Cover and simmer until carrot is almost tender, about 15 min. Add fish, milk, herbs and remaining 1 tsp. salt; heat to simmering and cook until fish flakes easily. Blend together half 'n' half and flour; add to chowder and heat thoroughly.

MARY HAWORTH Girl Causes Conflict By Wanting To Change Faith

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a girl, 18, with a big problem. It has to do with my parents and my religion. My parents are very religious and have raised me in a certain church that I won't identify. I have been active in this church considered one of its outstanding young members.

I have served as pianist, organist, soloist, choir member, Sunday School teacher, youth leader and in other capacities. But I feel like a hypocrite as I don't like this church and don't believe in its doctrines.

For six or seven years I have been drawn to the Catholic Church. I've attended Mass, read numerous books on Catholic doctrine, talked with priests and am now attending a Catholic school, to which I transferred because it has better educational facilities than our public high school.

The more I learn of the Catholic religion, the more strongly I want to be part of it. But my parents won't even listen when I try to explain myself; they think it is just a phase I am going through, not to be taken seriously.

How can I convince them that I am serious, and that I do know what I am doing? I don't stand it much longer. Things have gotten so bad they are threatening to send me back to public school.

I hate to go against my parents' wishes but if I can't get their permission. I am going to convert anyway. It is something I have to do. Please take time to consider my problem. I need your help. T. R.
