Notes and Comments.

—The London correspondent of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat describes a new motive power now in use on a short line of railway running between Manchester and Bolton, which its inventors claim will supersede steam and electricity. It is said to be cheaper itself compared with either, and entirely free from danger. It is called the Anhydrous Ammonia motor, a name which, if it succeeds, will soon be euphoniously modified by popular usage. The estimated cost of running cars with it is little less than three cents per mile. Ammonia, it is well known, has an irresistible tendency towards water. It is this chemical affinity which an English scientist, aided by a shrewd inventor, has turned to practical use as a motor power. The apparatus consists of a small box, in which are placed in proper proximity jars of water and of ammonia, so arranged as to accumulate and direct the energy generated as described. The result is a power sufficient to run a train of cars. The invention is not yet perfected, but its promoters are confident of success.

—Commenting upon the reported decision of the Dominion Government to attempt the rebate system at the end of this session, the Montreal Witness says:—

"The American Government certainly ought to be satisfied with the decision of our Government, which is virtually a surrender, and one which was not demanded by strict justice or by treaty. The New York canals, which were to have been opened to Canadian vessels on the same terms, according to the treaty, have never been opened. If the American Government were anxious to act up to the spirit and letter of the treaty as fully as they insist upon the Canadian Government doing, they would make the coasting trade free, abolish the laws compelling Canadian vessels to unload at the first American port touched at, and open the Erie and Champlain canals to Canadian vessels. Americans are beginning to take a great interest in the St. Lawrence route, and quite a movement has sprung up among them in favor of digging a twenty or twenty-five foot channel wherever necessary, to secure that depth of water for navigation purposes between Lake Superior and the sea. This is a project that we would rather see American money than Canadian expended upon. There are many more immediately profitable enterprises for Canadian money in developing other resources of the Dominion.

Literary Note.

THE LAKE MAGAZINE FOR AUGUST.—The first number has been issued of a new high-class Canadian magazine, published by The Lake Publishing Company of Toronto. In its chaste and elegant appearance it rivals the best of its American contemporaries, while in the character and popular interest of its contents it scores a decided success. The magazine is devoted to politics, science and general literature, and purposes filling in some measure, in the discussion of public questions, the place filled in Britain and the United States by the leading reviews of these countries. The greater portion of the magazine will, however, be given to articles, fiction and poetry, similar in kind to the contents of the best literary monthlies. The political articles will be contributed by leading statesmen and writers of both political parties, and appearing under the names of the individual writers as full and exhaustive discussions of timely topics of public concern, will possess unusual interest and value: in fact no intelligent student of political affairs can afford to neglect reading them. In the present number are articles on the Canadian and Imperial Federation, Edward Blake and Ireland, a Cheap and Simple Franchise, from the pens of leading Canadian journalists, and also articles on The Land of Mannana, A Canadian Literature, Second-Sight Along the Wires, Art in Canada Today, The Doctrine of Handicaps—all interesting and well written. Two stories and two poems of superior merit, in addition to a number of illustrations complete the list of contents. The Editor in his "salutation" says:—

"The Lake Magazine in appearing before the world on the quarter Centennial of the Dominion of Canada, has the honor to do so with confidence that, owing to the rapid strides which Canada has made in wealth and education since the date of Confederation, the new monthly will be welcomed by a much larger constituency of readers than any Canadian magazine issued in previous years."

How a Novice in Public Speaking Should Proceed.
Be careful to avoid excessive vehemence. On facing the audience draw a deep breath, stand very straight and remain perfectly silent for a few seconds. Nineteen times out of twenty the audience will be equally silent. Then begin very slowly and in so low a tone that the audience have to strain their ears to hear. The first flush of nervousness will pass away in one or two minutes, and then can safely warm to the subject and raise your voice.

How Mr. Beecher Read.

HIS BOOKS SUGGESTED TO HIM MANY OF HIS BEST THOUGHTS.

Stimulated, doubtless, by Mrs Henry Ward Beecher's published reminiscences of her husband, a paragraph has recently been circulated to the effect that the great preacher rarely read a book, and never could command the patience necessary to the careful reading of a volume. This is erroneous. Mr. Beecher's library was large and selected with great care. But after his entrance into public life he had but few leisure hours and comparatively little time for reading. He was a very slow reader, stopping often to ponder on what he had read.

If his attention was particularly attracted by a passage, or some thought was suggested by it not specially connected with what he was reading, I have seen him drop his book and sit a long time with that intense, far-off look so peculiar to him, and turning quickly to his writing table begin to write rapidly. The writing would be done on a small piece of paper, and on reading the sentence one could understand that the passage might have suggested the topic for the sermon.

Mr. Beecher seldom read novels, and when he did he would, in all probability, be called away when just in the middle of a chapter. He would lay aside the story, and perhaps not take it up again for days. The first early years of Mr. Beecher's public life he used to read Walter Scott's novels for rest and relaxation. Not all of them, but many; so, if he had a favorite writer it was Scott. In looking through the titles of Scott's works Mrs. Beecher recalls that there were some of them which did not, from a superficial examination, especially interest him, and which he never read. But those that he read had a special charm for him during the partial rest of the first spring months. Yet the next year he would read them again with renewed interest, always insisting that he didn't remember them. It is true that Mr. Beecher had a poor verbal memory, and it is doubtful if he could ever repeat a sentence from any work correctly. His friends who knew this trait in him were always uneasy if he attempted to quote a text of scripture. But he always gave the right meaning even if he didn't give the literal quotation. Often in some illustration there would be some incident from one of Scott's works, greatly enriching what he was illustrating, for which he gave the author full credit, but could never tell from which of Scott's stories he had extracted it, or in what connection the idea had come to him. In later years, his lighter reading was done on the cars going to or returning from a lecture, and he bought from the book by the leading reviews the most attractive and the least cumbersome.

At one time Mrs Beecher said: "Why, I never saw you open one of those books!" "Quietly he read for the book, opened it and pointed to a small pencil mark, and on reading the sentence one could understand that the passage might have suggested the topic for the sermon."
