MARY HAWORTH

Woman Is Dismayed By Pastor's Response

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Two years ago, after much soul searching, my husband and I changed church affiliations and joined a local congregation.

We greatly admire the minister and have told him so, in person and also in a letter (which he never acknowledged) praising a particular sermon. We've had him to dinner once (when he seemed to enjoy) and also out for a snack several times.

You might think we would be friends by now, something my husband and I earnestly wish for, but he is very reserved with us, at times not even saying "hello," even if there is just a small group present.

When he does speak to us, de is very formal and impersonal. We feel bad and confused about this, as he is outgoing and friendly with most everyone else, it seems.

He has often talked of a wall between the parishioners and himself, something he doesn't like or understand, he says, as we are all "one family." Yet many times I've been left standing with a grin on my face, or an out - and - out smile, only to receive a brisk handshake and cold "good morning."

We love the church dearly and so do our children. Are we expecting too much in wishing our minister was more friendly? P.S.: The congregation is relatively small. K.J.

DEAR K.J.: Just because a man is a clergyman (charged with pastoral duties proper to his calling) it doesn't follow, necessarily, that he will be more competent in dealing with his parishioners' unsatisfied emotional needs than other citizens are.

As I get the picture, your minister is rather stiffly on the defensive against your eager-eyed approval and candid campaign to be counted among his close friends.

It appears that he feels you are smitten with him and rather aggressive in courting his interest. Hence he is in effect holding you at arm's - length, partly perhaps to head off gossip and also possibly out of discourage your personalized approach until your fervor expires of neglect.

Almost without exception, members of the clergy, endowed with any degree of winsomeness, soon become targets of ardent female admiration and fond pursuit, registered in various genteel, indirect, favor-seeking or would-be helpful ways.

I would suppose that your pastor is no stranger to that sort of thing and has learned to take cover (almost by instinct) in chill formality, when he notes a new lady parishioner beginning to shower him with praise, invitations, radiant smiles, etc., that seem to call for reciprocal special appreciation.

Perhaps I should add, however, that to the extent a clergyman is truly a "man of God" (so - called) — a transmitting agent of God's love of people — to that extent good-hearted people will find him irresistibly magnetic, dear and lovable. But how few clergymen attain such maturity! The few who do are wonderfully at ease, with paternal - type simplicity, in giving genuine affection (as if it were bread) to their consituents.

It takes great character, in the pastoral role, to remain psychologically receptive to the wistful approach of hungry souls hungry for friendship, sympathy, understanding and acceptance), and give them abundant emotional affirmation, without losing pastoral poise and moral reserve, and without veering towards indiscretion (of thought or attitude). Jesus Christ gave the definite example in that regard.

My advice is: cue your behavior to your pastor's lead. Be as cordial as he is, no more and no less. M. H.

ELLEN'S DIARY

Robins And Wild Geese Sighted By Eager Eyes

A little company of feeders of the cow - kind came in to Alderlea, in a springtime outlay today. All in good faith, trusting, as farm-folks will, that beneath the present coverlet of snow, the grasses are awaiting warm wind's call; that pastures will again become green-spread, not knee-deep and rankly, but with a lush sweet clovery growth, and that the stream in the low of our valley will continue to give an ample flow.

"What would you think of the proposition?" the younger farmer had asked James with a twinkle this morning, in a father - son conference.

James surveyed the white hillsides, reckoned, we knew, the extent of the remaining stores in mow and in granary. Shook his head.

"I wouldn't like to say" he replied. "This is a strange spring. It could be quite a while before the stock get to the grass. And then again, there may not be too much grass. One never knows. Perhaps what we have will bare it without bringing in more. But" he smiled, "please yourself!"

"It's only like putting down an extra plate or two at mealtime" we said later to James.

"I know, Ellen" he nodded. "But, all the same... well, the younger generation of farmers, as I see them, never saw a bare mow, or an empty granary through the stabling... or a summer of drought. If they had, they'd be more canny about getting involved in things — in biting off perhaps more than they can chew. Not that in this case a few feeders more or less will either help or harm."

"In a way, farming is a gamble, isn't it? You do or don't do something, and the decision you make may mean so much one way or the other", we said.

"They do say that even marriage is a gamble — but interesting!" he grinned.

So the feeders came, walking up the trail from lane's end. And beneath the lane - bridge today, the stream ran in a flow which indicated that now in some increase, it was commencing to bear off winter's discards.

"Sunday shifts of moon — that's never too good a sign" a farmer we talked with today commented. "And if you notice, this month has them. It's likely we'll be getting... well, rain, and mists, and the odd snowflurry."

"I saw robins today" Alex reported this evening.

"And I saw wild geese Mack said.

"What's for supper?" Peter questioned, coming in from the stables with James, near the mealtime.

"Potatoes... and point" James replied, with a teasing chuckle. "You eat the potato on your plate and point at the meat on mine!"

The youngster stopped a moment to consider this levity.

"That's the silliest thing I've ever heard!" he laughed. "Besides it's not meat you're having." He sniffed to catch the aroma. "I'd say it's bacon" he said.

An April day this was, mixture of cloud and sun. Nevertheless there was a mildness in the air, which declared the cropping could be, just around a turn of the way.

Until tomorrow — Diary — Good - night.....

FALSE TEETH That Loosen Need Not Embarrass

Many wearers of false teeth have suffered real embarrassment because their plate dropped, slipped or wobbled at just the wrong time. Do not live in fear of this happening to you. Just sprinkle a little FASTEETH, the alkaline (non-acid) powder, on your plates. Hold false teeth more firmly, so they feel more comfortable. Does not sour. Checks "plate odor breath". Get FASTEETH at drug counters everywhere.
