Ottawa Is Cautious In Restricting Oil Imports

By HAROLD MORRISON Canadian Press Staff Writer OTTAWA (CP)—The Canadian government is taking a cautious approach to the question of restricting oil imports. Informants say the possibility of any immediate action on requests for curbs is becoming more and more remote.

Main reason for this attitude is reported to be the warning by Venezuela that any move by Canada to restrict imports would invite retaliation against Canadian exports.

Venezuela, relatively a large South American buyer of varied Canadian goods including wheat, ships about 10 per cent of her total oil exports to the Eastern Canadian seaboard.

Last year Canada's total imports from Venezuela climbed to $248,000,000 from $208,000,000 in 1956. Virtually all of this went for oil. Canadian exports to Venezuela were much smaller, amounting to $40,000,000, though this was an increase from the 1956 total of $34,000,000. Wheat, metals and paper were among the major items shipped.

A few weeks ago Trade Minister Churchill prepared a statement for a United States publication in which he made clear that if it ever became necessary to restrict oil imports, "there would be a further string of consequences which would affect other countries and contribute to a contraction of world trade."

"We are really interested in expanding trade," Mr. Churchill said.

The demand for oil curbs arose out of the U.S. restriction on oil imports from Canada and other suppliers. Western Canadian producers argued that with some federal encouragement, a pipeline could be built to Montreal to replace imported oil with Alberta production.

But to make that move economic, action would have to be taken to restrict foreign supplies.

WANTS CURBS LIFTED The federal view is that the natural flow for oil is north and south. Rather than restrict imports, the government would like to see the American market restored for Western Canadian oil. It has repeatedly emphasized that the U.S. should lift its curbs against Canada as an economic and defence consideration.

"If our joint defence efforts of North America mean anything," says Mr. Churchill, "surely nothing can be gained by weakening the industries of your closest ally and much could be lost in case of an emergency."

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL

FLORENCE, Italy (AP)—This is the story of a man who returned from the dead and a nun who obtained the Pope's permission to marry him.

It started 20 years ago in the central Italian hill town of Falciano, near Arezzo, south of Florence. Alba Guidotti, a pretty girl of 15, and Rinaldo Matesini, 16, became engaged.

A year later, in 1939, war came. Rinaldo was called to arms and before he could wed Alba he was sent off to Greece.

Word came in a few months that Rinaldo was dead. Alba, grief-stricken, entered a nearby Roman Catholic convent and took the vows of a cloistered Benedictine nun.

Rinaldo, however, was not dead. Wounded, he was shuttled from hospital to hospital. Not until 1946 did he return to the Arezzo hill country to learn Alba had entered a convent.

Eventually he arranged to meet her in the presence of the superior of the convent. Alba decided to ask to be released from her vows to be released from her vows to be released from her vows.

Ten years later, last November, came the word that Pope Pius had granted her the release. It was a long time to wait, but the Church considers such dispensation a grave matter requiring the fullest study.

A month ago Alba and Rinaldo were married in the Falciano parish church. Early this week their story became known to Italian newspapers, and Thursday Church authorities confirmed that the wedding had the blessing of the holy see.

Expect Cautious Moves Iceland Fisheries Dispute

LONDON (Reuters)—Some of the Atlantic pact's most powerful members are expected to move warily in a dispute with Iceland over its decision to extend fishing limits.

The reason for caution, observers here say, is twofold: Firstly, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization can ill afford to antagonize its smallest member and jeopardize an important link in Western defence.

Secondly, Iceland's decision to extend its fishing limits from four to 12 miles off its coast is throwing NATO members into two opposing camps.

The two-pronged dilemma arose Monday when Iceland announced plans to prevent foreign trawlers from fishing within 12 miles of the Icelandic coast from Sept. 1. Icelandic ships will be able to fish within the 12 miles but not the four-mile limit.

Denmark's Faroe Islands, lying midway between Britain and Iceland, decided Friday to make a similar extension.

WANTS EXTENSION TOO Denmark is reported anxious that the fishing limits of its two possessions, the Faroe Islands and Greenland, also should be extended to 12 miles.

Norway is regarded as hesitant over taking similar action. Canada is thought to favor Iceland because it wants to extend its own limits.

France has joined Britain in condemning the move. Belgium has protested against it and West Germany has expressed surprise. Britain stands most to lose by Iceland's action.

About one-quarter of all fish consumed in Britain comes from waters which would be out of bounds to British trawlers if a 12-mile Iceland limit became effective.

Britain has refused to accept Iceland's decision as having "any effect in law" and warned it would be its duty "to prevent any attempt to interfere with British fishing vessels."

But it was felt here that the larger members of NATO would be unwilling to take too strong a line.

HELP FOR REDS Any NATO pressure against Iceland may increase Communist strength in the country and once again raise the issue of withdrawal of U.S. bases there.

Geographically, Iceland lies in a strategic position in the North Atlantic. Though it has no armed forces of its own, it has accepted despite strong opposition United States bases for naval and air warning purposes.

Western military leaders have pointed out that in view of the growth of the Russian submarine fleet, Iceland could play a big role in anti-submarine operations.

U.S. Expels Red Diplomat For Buying Secret Documents

WASHINGTON (AP)—The United States is expelling a Russian diplomat on the grounds that he paid an American citizen at least $450 to obtain secret military documents.

Announcing the ouster order Saturday, the state department said the Soviet Embassy had been warned more than a year ago that this kind of spy activity "would not be condoned."

The diplomat was identified as Nikolai I. Kurochkin, third secretary of the embassy.

U.S. officials said Kurochkin did not succeed in obtaining the secret documents he sought but did get some non-secret documents described as U.S. Army manuals. Such manuals are sold to the public by the government printing office.

WRITER IMPLICATED The American was named by a justice department official as Charles Theodore Beaumet, 25, of nearby Arlington, Va. Beaumet was described as a magazine writer on military matters.

Nathan B. Levin, head of the justice department's foreign agents registration section, said the department learned Beaumet had been dealing with Kurochkin and notified Beaumet he was required to register as a foreign agent. Beaumet did so in April and listed Kurochkin as his "principal," Levin said.

Beaumet told the justice department, Levin said, that between September and December last year he gave Kurochkin about 25 nonclassified training manuals and that the Russian paid him about $435.

The Russian is expected to leave the country by the end of next week. The state department's action declaring Kurochkin persona non grata came about three weeks after Russia had expelled an American diplomat on grounds of improper behavior. The United States denied the charge.
