

U.S. Steel Men Want Iron Ore To Be Continued Duty-Free

By GEORGE KITCHEN
Canadian Press Staff Writer
WASHINGTON (CP) — Leading American steel producers urged the U.S. tariff commission Tuesday to leave untouched the present duty-free status of imports of foreign iron ore.

All indicated they opposed either tariffs or quotas on the imports, which come mainly from Canada and Venezuela, on the ground such restrictions would raise consumer prices in the U.S. and speed the depletion of domestic iron ore resources.

They were joined by V. C. Wansborough of Toronto, managing director of the Canadian Metal Mining Association, who said Canadian producers would "greatly regret and deplore" any step that would restrict the American market or result in higher costs of steel.

All appeared at a one-day hearing called by the commission at the request of the Senate finance committee to study competition in the United States between iron ore produced in the U.S. and abroad. The commission now reports to the Senate committee but is not required to recommend any changes in customs treatment of ore imports.

NO CURBS FAVORED
No representation for import restrictions was made during the hearing.

Wansborough, noting that Canada exported between 12,500,000 and 13,000,000 tons of ore to the U.S. in 1957, said his association believes the United States "will continue to be, as it now is, the largest single market for Canadian ore."

"It seems inevitable to us that the steel industry of the United States will continue to expand and, we hope, as it is reasonable to expect, that Canada will share in providing the increased quantities of iron ore needed by the expansion. . . .

R. M. Lloyd, administrative vice-president of U.S. Steel Corporation, warned that restrictions would lead to higher steel prices and said his firm was concerned about the impact on this country's foreign friendships which would result if foreign iron ore production were crippled by being deprived of markets in the United States because of tariffs or import quotas."

CO-OP ANNIVERSARY

The 14-member executive of the International Co-operative Alliance, representing 13 countries, will attend, and afterwards will hold an executive meeting at Ottawa April 11-13.
