

Partial Defence Possible Against A-Weapons In War

OTTAWA (CP)—Partial defence is possible, against battlefield atomic blasts, says Lt. Col. R. A. Kluehn of the army's directorate of weapons and development.

Col. Kluehn was director of Exercise Sapling in Nevada in May in which Canadian troops participated for the first time in an atomic test.

Writing in the current issue of the Canadian Army Journal, Col. Kluehn says:

"While appreciating the awful effects of atomic explosions, all participating personnel never the less are of the opinion that a great deal can be done to defend oneself against these weapons.

COULD SURVIVE

"It was found, for example, that troops could survive the effects of blast, heat and radiation if at the time of the explosion they were occupying a well-constructed trench.

"It was found entirely feasible to obtain quickly the information required concerning the areas of residual contamination. By the employment of proper techniques this information can be obtained without casualties to the reconnaissance parties.

"Under the conditions of the test it was learned that it is entirely feasible to carry out field decontamination of the personnel and their equipment."

The Canadian troops, with the army's No. 1 radiation detection unit as the nucleus, were in five-foot-deep trenches 3,200 yards from the centre of the explosion when the bomb was set off May 5.

MANY LESSONS

They moved into the contaminated area soon after the explosion to check the amount of radiation, thus determining safe and unsafe areas for troops to move.

Personnel and equipment later were decontaminated by use of vacuum cleaners and lots of soap and water.

The journal says:

"Many lessons were learned on Exercise Sapling. Perhaps the most important was that, according to American authorities, this group of Canadian servicemen are as well versed in radiation detection and decontamination as any in the world."

Those attending the adult classes, also sponsored by the Y's Men's Club, at 7 p.m. each evening, are asked to provide their own transportation to the shore, if possible.

In charge of the Y's Men's swimming program this year is a committee from the Y's Men's Club consisting of Ralph MacFarlane, chairman, and Keith Lapp, Malcolm Matheson and Charlie Baillem.
