Rowan Fitzgerald Receives Honor

Rowan Fitzgerald, 13 year old son of Mr. and Mrs. T.L. Fitzgerald, has been chosen "newspaper boy for the week." He is a grade eight student at Queen Charlotte High School and has been delivering papers for about two years.

"The chance to meet so many people" is what Rowan likes best about his job. Six mornings a week this responsible young lad leaves his home at 6:15 and delivers 41 Guardians before 7 o'clock. His route number eight, extends on Kent Street from Pownal to Government House and Rochford Square.

"All the people on my route are really friendly," Rowan said, "I like to meet them and have a little chat when I go collecting."

Generally Rowan gets up by himself in the morning. "Sometimes Mom has to call me once or twice in the winter," he said. Rowan is a great hockey fan. His favourite team is the Montreal Canadiens and his favourite player is Jean Beliveau. He himself plays left wing for the Senators, a local Bantam team.

This week's newspaper boy has lots of hobbies. He likes to build model cars, collect stamps and do oil painting. He is a member of the Boy Scouts and of the Drama Club at his school. He likes baseball, fishing and trying his aim at the rifle range.

He started in the paperboy business as a means of obtaining pocket money. Before having a regular route he sold papers on the street. He says his job is a great way to make money and "a reliable source of income."

DEPEND ON THE GIRL
On the matter of girls in the delivery business, Rowan said that he supposed it would depend on the girl. He thought most girls would find the getting up so early in the morning rough going.

The Liberals defeated the amendment to the throne speech, and Prime Minister West MacAlear continued the reply until the adjournment at 10 p.m.

The Saturday morning sitting was perhaps the liveliest in the parliament. The opposition put the government on the hot seat during the question period but the challenge was ably met. Jack Rappaport, minister of public works and labor informed the House that the employment situation in Canada was at the best in the world today; Tom Gallant, health and welfare, said the government was sponsoring Eskimos' study of pastel art and design to take the monotony out of Eskimo housing.

The most valuable part of the parliament was a constructive bill on Senate reform introduced by the Minister of Justice Mark MacPherson, and seconded by Eldon Jamieson, his parliamentary secretary. The bill was entitled An Act to Amend the British North American Act 1867 to 1965. It provided for 72 senators, election of these senators by the provincial legislatures and division of the senate into six committees of twelve each: Canadian development, culture, finance, provincial-federal relations, civil liberties and divorce procedures. The property qualification was taken away and senate was made responsible for election of its own officers. The bill which passed its third reading was designed to improve the internal organization of the senate and prevent patronage.

The House also went on record as supporting the abolition of capital punishment, the lowering of the voting age from 21 to 18 and the diplomatic recognition of the People's Republic of Red China.

Pages for the session were Arlene Boylan, Vangie Trainor and Bill Smythe.

PHILIP MACDONALD, leader of the opposition in St. Dunstan's University Model Parliament is seen speaking at a meeting in the Legislature Saturday morning. The Model Parliament began a Friday night and ended at 5 p.m. Saturday. The Prime Minister and leader of the Liberal party was Weston MacAlear. All sessions were held in the Provincial Legislative Chamber.

St. Dunstan's Parliament Ends In Weekend Session

The St. Dunstan's University Model Parliament met this weekend in the Provincial Legislative chambers. The parliament was opened Friday evening at 7 p.m. by Governor-General Alban Farmer. Sergeant-at-arms was John Delaney, Newfoundland.

Following the Throne Speech, Robert Grindley, provincial deputy speaker took the chair as speaker for the model session. Phillip MacDonal, leader of the opposition immediately deposited a Liberal member from her seat in the House because the Speaker voted with the government, giving them one more vote than entitled. Mary Cullen, minister without portfolio, thereupon welcomed Mr. Grindley to the ranks of the Liberal party.

Private members, Mike McCormack and Gemma Dunn moved and seconded the address from the throne. A vote of non-confidence was made by Conservatives Phillip MacDonal and Tom McMillan, and discussion proceeded on the amendment. The Minister of Finance, Dave Campbell from St. John East praised the measures put forth by the government to Canadianize the economy. He was backed up by Joe Condon, York Central, who explained that Canada must have a Federal Securities and Exchange Commission to maintain a stable exchange rate.

The government's foreign policy was bitterly contested by Mr. Doucette, Outremont-St. Jean, who felt that Canada as a member of the international peace commission should not contribute non-military aid to South Vietnam. Bill Morse, Minister of External Affairs said it is possible both to negotiate and contribute such aid as food and medical supplies.

Mike O'Brien, Laval, supported fully the government's policy to appropriate funds by means of National lotteries to abolish all tuition fees at Canadian Universities. This prospect shocked completely the opposition member from Brighton-Greenfield who visualized bingo players paying for tuition — "an obscure vision," taunted a Liberal.

Dave Mullally, graced with three portfolios — Agriculture, Fisheries, and Forestry, was described doubtfully by an opposition member as a "great" man for such a position. Mr. Mullally replied "some are born to greatness, some have greatness thrust upon them, and some achieve greatness. When my party won an astounding victory, I achieved greatness. When I was given three portfolios I had greatness thrust upon me, and when I was born in Souris, my constituency, I was born to greatness."

The Liberals defeated the amendment to the throne speech, and Prime Minister West MacAlear continued the reply until the adjournment at 10 p.m.

The Saturday morning sitting was perhaps the liveliest in the parliament. The opposition put the government on the hot seat during the question period but the challenge was ably met. Jack Rappaport, minister of public works and labor informed the House that the employment situation in Canada was at the best in the world today; Tom Gallant, health and welfare, said the government was sponsoring Eskimos' study of pastel art and design to take the monotony out of Eskimo housing.
