—KENSINGTON W. M. S. —The March meeting of the Kensington United Church Women's Missionary Society was held March 3 with 24 members present. The worship period was conducted by the president, Mrs. J. Y. Fadyen with prayer being offered by Mrs. Alexander MacKay. "Our Own Backyard" from Ch IX in "Where'er the Sun" was introduced by Mrs. Waldon Davison and was developed as a dialogue with Mrs. W. F. Taylor representing "Mrs. Canada" and Mrs. George Burt representing "Mrs. U. S. A." Interesting and instructive topics were discussed, showing on one side the ardent and enthusiastic interest in church work while on the part of others the neglect and disinterest in Christianity. It was realized that while Christians still have an obligation and responsibility for overseas missions yet they must ever be aware of the need of evangelism in "our own backyard". Those in charge of the study for next month will be Mrs. Russell MacKay, Mrs. W. G. Simpson and Mrs. George Brookings.

Mrs. Inglis reported that 59 calls, four hospital calls, had been made and 22 cards, 10 treats and four flowers had been sent during the month. Mrs. P. Walker read a letter from Miss Louise Calbeck re Temperance work.

A discussion followed advocating writing to the editors of leading magazines protesting against the liquor ads. advertised in their magazines.

The allocation suggested for the March 13th meeting.

S' side High Notes

By Betty Enman

For the past month the pupils of Summerside High have been busy making their various projects, and these were exhibited in the school auditorium education week. Large crowds visited the school each afternoon and evening to see the exhibits and there was general agreement that the students had made a fine showing. On the opening night Mr. C. L. Bennet, professor of English at Dalhousie University, discussed teaching methods.

The home economic students under the supervision of Mrs. Alison MacLean and Mrs. Davis Lidstone, presented their fashion show, "Your Carriage Waits" on Tuesday and Thursday evenings. The commentators were Paty Preston, Elizabeth Nicholson, Diane MacQuarrie, Irene Mountain and Mary Shaw. The garments made by the girls ranged from sports clothing to evening wear.

The editorial staff of the Summerside High School "Emblem" was elected by the students of Grades X, XI, XII and Commercial this week. Doris Heckbert is the new editor-in-chief and the following are the representatives from the different classes: Grade XII, Margaret Shaw; Grade XI A, Lorna Lawson; Grade XI B, Harold Leard; Commercial, Dorothy Cannon; Grade X A, Garland Harris; Grade X B, Elizabeth Bowden. All the members of the Students' Council are also members of the editorial staff.

The four teams left to play in the semi-final series of the school bowling league are Jim MacLeans Service, Hanes' Meat Market, White Star Laundry and Boates Pharmacy.

Next week the students will be very busy studying for, and taking the spring examinations, so sports and other activities will be cut down somewhat in all probability. We wish them all the best of luck.

—K. Society was read by Mrs. Simpson and it was decided to raise as much as possible. Mrs. MacKay reported on the number of books read during the last month. The meeting closed by repeating the

Strange But True

By F. H. MacArthur

On November 3, 1917, Mortimer Noyes of the 1st Battalion, then a subaltern, was marching down a road to Passchendaele, preparatory to attacking the famous Ridge. Noyes was heading his platoon, with Gordon, 2nd in command of the company, on his left and his sergeant on his right; all three were chatting freely as they marched along.

The hour was 11:30 a. m. Coming up on their left was a motor lorry, bearing a corps badge and the soldiers soon discovered that it was an ammunition vehicle from a siege battery. Then, with more interest, they recognized it as belonging to the battery in which Noyes' brother was serving. Being an experienced driver young Noyes had been detailed as "Driver, M. T." in the ammunition column.

As the vehicle drew near it slowed down and the three marched quickly to the mouth of hell, and face through the open window and saw him wave his arm in greeting.

Then they heard him shout: "Cheerio, boys, good luck and God bless you. Can't stop."

A few minutes more and the lorry had passed out of sight round a curve in the road.

Gordon asked, "Who was that morale builder, fellow?" And when Noyes told him he said, "Well, he appeared to be in a devil of a hurry." Said the mouth of hell brother, "Oh! Well all I can say is that he doesn't look like you."

Two days later the first battalion went into action and two days later they returned from the jaws of death with the mouth of hell brother, only four officers and less than 100 other ranks. Private Noyes had been slightly wounded and badly gassed. Gordon passed away in Noyes' arms soon after that gigantic battle started: moments later his sergeant dropped dead from a bullet in his head.

Back at the base Noyes wrote his brother telling him that he survived the bloody onslaught and wanted to know why he was in such a terrible hurry the day he passed them on the St. Julien Road.

The answer that came back floored him. "You never saw me, brother, as that day I was busy down near Cambrai, about 70 miles away. Had I been driving that motor lorry I most certainly would have taken time out to give you a brief chat with you and your comrades."

In later years the brothers often talked over the strange happening but could find no explanation except the strong bond of affection which held until death, claimed the younger brother in 1946.

Two notes, may, perhaps, be relevant. First, Sergeant Preston, who was one of the "10 per cent" to be left behind when the rest of the Battalion went into action, was strongly attached to Gordon, and just before the battalion marched off went up to him and wished him the best of luck, to which he is reported to have said: "Thanks—I know what is coming to me."

Second: On the day of assault, zero was 6:50 a. m. and the troop "stood to" 10 minutes before that time. Sergeant Preston and Noyes had been looking at what was left of that gallant company (half of them had become casualties during that awful night) and were standing talking together and Noyes pointed out a single chimney in Passchendaele village showing against the eastern sky and said "That's our goal, fellows. Let's get going." But no sooner had they started than the sergeant gripped Noyes' arm and said, "You and I will see the sunrise, but only one of us will live to see it set—and I cannot tell which."

Just then the big guns of the enemy opened up and the soldiers ran on, the lone chimney their objective.

A third note: Some months ago Noyes was talking over the strange incident of his brother with an uncle, a clergyman of the Church of England who was not at all surprised that Noyes' brother appeared to him on the eve of Passchendaele, but expressed the opinion that it was unusual for Gordon and the Sergeant to have seen the whole incident also.

In September of 1953, persons living near the Scottish west coast were amazed by the news that a strange sea monster came ashore on a lonely stretch of beach. Those that saw the creature said it was about 30 feet long and covered with horse-like hair about one inch in length and very thick. The thing had a neck like a giraffe's, a head like a camel's, four short, sturdy legs and a 12-foot tail.

Fishermen reported having seen a similar sea monster on the island of Ailsa Craig, 10 miles out to sea. They said it was exactly like the one that came ashore off the Scottish coast. The smell of the decomposing carcass on the beach smelled to high heaven and had to be burned by the people who lived in the vicinity.

Local scientists expressed the belief that it might be likened to the plesiosaurus, a marine reptile
