Lenten Meditation

From The Columns of The Times, London

ST. PAUL'S CONVERSION.

One of the manifestations of the risen Christ resulted in the "wonderful conversion" of St. Paul. St. Paul as an influence towers above all other Christian leaders; and the foundation of this was his meeting with Christ on the Damascus road. He described this experience with the same words that he used when he recited in order the Lord's appearances to others after his Resurrection: "He was seen of me also." That "seeing" changed the aggressive devotee of Pharisaism into Christ's apostle, who thus became a "vessel chosen to bear the Name" of Jesus, and to interpret it in his "Gospel," to the Church of all time.

Mystical visions marked the call of many Hebrew prophets to their ministry. St. Paul himself had "visions and revelations" in which his mind was transported in a state of rapture into the invisible world. But all these visions differed in kind from the sight of Christ which converted the Jewish persecutor who became the Christian saint.

Jesus risen appeared to his disciples on the plane of sense and sight as surely as in his daily intercourse with them during his incarnate life. St. Paul's "seeing" was essentially the same as theirs: "Am I not an apostle? Have I not seen Jesus our Lord?" It happened to him under conditions as actual as those in which it might happen to a modern motorist travelling from Jerusalem to Damascus.

It is no disparagement of mysticism to emphasize its difference from the experience in which Christ created, first in his disciples, and then in his chief antagonist, their invincible faith in his victory over death and his sovereignity over life. That the mystics touch spirtual reality only those without their experience will deny. But in Paul's seeing and speaking with Jesus the veil between the unseen order of spirit and the material world of sense was rent away, and eternity visibly broke into time. To him nothing could ever be the same again : his prejudices and denials were completely destroyed.

The STORY of HEALTH by The Jenkins Pharmacy

Few purchases today represent bigger bargains than prescriptions. Because the modern drugs your physician prescribes are so effective against serious diseases, people live and get well faster than ever before. This means hospital, nursing and medical costs are lowered.

"There's another angle, too. Despite the millions upon millions spent on research, the pharmaceutical industry is dedicated to lowering drug costs.

"Within the last five years, for example, streptomycin prices have been reduced 97%. Similar price reductions have been made on such other life-saving drugs as penicillin, cortisone and many others.

"In these days of inflation we thought you'd like to know your prescription is still an outstanding value. We'd welcome the opportunity to help you to better health at lower cost."

May we dispense your prescription.
