ALL-WEATHER

HERE IS a coat that isn't afraid to go out in the rain. Of water - repellent black satin, it is lined in vivid turquoise - dotted white taffeta with a scarf to match. Curved seaming terminates in low - placed pockets. The bow at the low waist is easily removed for a more tailored effect. A real boon, this coat, since it is smart enough for any evening occasion.

MARY HAWORTH

The Good-Hearted Folk Think No Evil Of Others

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Sue came to work in our office about four years ago. She bored everyone, talking all the time of her husband, Jim. She still does.

But it wasn't long before she and John—one of the men in our office—were making excuses to work together as much as possible, though actually it was a sham.

Soon, also, she and her husband, and John and his wife, were visiting together once or twice during the week, and on weekends—although Sue dislikes Mrs. John immensely and never has a kind word to say for her.

Sue and John changed their coffee - breaks to coincide; and always have coffee together. Also they shifted their lunch hour to a later time, when everyone else has returned—and they've been seen meeting at lunch.

THEY RENDEZVOUS

Mostly the offices are vacant at lunch, except for a skeleton force to answer the phones. The file room is vacant, and it has become apparent to those who stay to answer phones that John and Sue spend this time in the file room—behind the back files where they can't be observed.

There is a lot of gossip about them, of course; but some of the girls feel that there is nothing to it. Because Sue talks of her husband all the time, they assume that she and John are just good friends. Other girls say Sue's talk of her husband is just a cover - up; that her actions speak so loud they can't hear what she says. They believe the girls who are loyal to her are just naive. What do you think?

Y.Z.

AS YOU THINK

DEAR Y.Z.: In a situation of this kind (and most large offices aren't without them) the good-hearted folk who think no evil of the ill - advised pair reflect moral credit on themselves. Whereas those who are suspiciously inclined, bound and determined to smell a mouse, are revealing a certain prurience of mind, it seems to me.

In other words, your attitude tells whether you are, unconsciously, above that sort of thing; or equal to it, given a chance, with somebody who appeals to you strongly.

In promulgating Christian rules of moral health, St. Paul by implication warns against polluting one's consciousness with avid thoughts of others' wrong doing (real or imaginary). In a letter to the Phillipians (4:8.) he says: "Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report, if there be any virtue, and if there by any praise, think on these things . . . and the God of peace shall be with you."

DOES CRITIC ENVY

Concerning the pro - and - con gossip in the office, my feeling is: — If you aren't the office supervisor, responsible for maintaining good standards of office morale, then the gist of Sue's and John's behavior is none of your business, really.

Whether or not you are justified in believing "the worst" about Sue, the fact is that you can't improve her character (or your own) by trying to sell neutrals your theory that she is a sham and a hypocrite — using wifely poses to gull the audience, while she flirts with a married man.

Or maybe you aren't interested in character improvement. Maybe you feel destructive towards persons who seem, from your view, to be "getting away" with the sort of thing that reputable folk don't do. In which case, you ought to search your soul to learn why your disposition towards their sinning is more on the witch-burning order than sorrowful. Because where there is anger mixed into reproach, along this line, usually there is stymied indignant envy. It is as if the accuser resents the accused, as seeming to enjoy the best of two worlds.

Is this the real fuel back of your campaign to arouse general condemnation of Sue, if possible?

M.H.

IDA BAILEY ALLEN

Right Marinade Choice Makes Gourmet Dish

Whenever the Chef and I make personal appearances, someone in the audience is sure to ask, "Just what are marinades? When and where should they be used?"

FROM THE FRENCH

The word "marinade" comes from the French verb "mariner" which means, in cooking language, to let stand several hours in a highly seasoned, usually uncooked tart sauce or pickle made with equal parts of oil, vinegar or lemon juice or dry wine.

This marihade adds piquant flavor and helps to tenderize meat, poultry or game or to give sparkling taste to fish, shellfish and vegetables or any food with which it is used.

THE SECRET

The use of the right marinade can mean the difference between an ordinary and a gourmet dish. The secret of most good marinades is the addition of the correct proportion of fresh spices and herbs to a base of oil and half as much vinegar or equal parts of lemon juice or dry wine.

Powdered spices cannot be removed before cooking and so impart a cloudy appearance to cooked foods. It is advisable, therefore, to use whole leaf herbs and whole spices which can be strained out later.

Use basil in marinades for beef chicken and many vegetables. Bay leaves for all meats and vegetables. Celery or fennel seed with fish and vegetables. Caraway seed for sauerbraten. Marjoram or thyme for vetetables, pork, lamb, beef and game. Tarragon or rosemary for poultry and vegetables. Whole cloves for beef, mutton and shrimp. Mixed pickling spice for beef, lamb and, venison. Garlic or and onion for almost all marinades.

Tomorrow's Dinner: Quartered lettuce; French dressing, marinated lamb chops; green pea puree; corn kernels saute; bear pot applesauce; coffee, tea, milk.

All measurements are level

Marinated Lamb Chops: Prepare a marinade as directed below. Spread over 6 large lamb chops cut 1" thick. Refrigerate 4 hrs. or more. Turn once. Broil as usual, allowing from 12 to 15 min. Turn once. Accompaniment: broiled eggplant or mushrooms or corn kernels saute.

Merinade for Lamb chops: Combine 1 tsp. table salt, ¼ tsp. onion or garlic salt, ⅛ tsp. fresh ground black pepper, 1 tsp. rosemary, ¼ c. salad oil, 2 tbsp. cider vinegar and 2 tbsp. table mustard. Use as directed.

Bean Pot Applesauce: Bake this old-time delectable in a bean pot or casserole along with a roast, fruit cake or other long baking food.

Wash, pare, core and cut 11 large, tart, cooking apples into eighths. Combine in the baking utensil with 1¼ c. sugar and sweet cider to 2-3 cover. Slow-bake, covered, for 2 hrs or until a rich red in color. Serve chilled, topping with whipped cream.

GREEN PEA PUREE

For quick green pea puree to serve 6, saute ¼ c. fine-chopped onion until limp in 2 tbsp. butter in a large saucepan. Add ¼ c. water, ¼ tsp. pepper, 1 tsp. mint flakes (optional) and the undiluted contents 2 (10½ oz.) cans green pea soup. Stir-cook until very hot.

"Are you awake, Ellen?" James asked softly then retiring. So we heard the news we had been expecting ever since we had heard the kitchen-door open and close, the farmers' steps frosty along the path to the stables, and sleep eluding us we had visited with an old friend of eastern star, caught in the dark lace of the birch beyond the window.

"And a nice one too" James said, coming to his pillow. "Yes, should make a fair-good animal" he commented, turning off the light to end his overtime of day.

"Let's sharpen our axes and go to cut wood" Mack proposed to Gage when he came by cycling this afternoon.

It was, we thought, as well, however, that young interests turned instead to harness and hitch the pup to a sled though it meant visits to the cupboard in search of tidbits to coax him to mobility those times when he chose to sit between the slack traces. But what smiles appeared when he was moved to go!

Even Granddaughter, now a "young leddy" of a maid, was not above taking her turn behind this dog team, and Alex too was also a delighted passenger on the white trails about. What happy young laughs there were from those holidaying whom the classrooms will by this have recalled.

And the day—what was it? A spell of crystal sheen and clean and beautiful hours.
