Students Warned After Dog Succumbs To Rabies

NEW YORK (AP) — The New York health department warned a Florida blood bank Friday that a girl who donated a pint of blood had been in contact with a rabid dog.

The blood donor was 21-year-old Lynda Kell of Queens, who is one of the co-eds at Florida State Southern College who played with the dog, kept secretly as a mascot in defiance of sorority house rules.

The dog died Monday of rabies, prompting the Florida college's officials to warn vacationing students all over the United States to take precautions.

Only seven girls actually were bitten or scratched by the dog, but 82 were believed to have been exposed.

Rabies is invariably fatal in humans unless counteracted by a series of anti-rabies injections. The disease also can incubate, showing no symptoms for as long as a week.

Miss Kell and Mary Rudolph, another Florida Southern student from Queens, began taking the anti-rabies shots as a precaution. Other girls vacationing at home in the New York area also have started the injections.

When Miss Kell told city health authorities she had donated blood Dec. 17 to the Polk County blood bank in Lakeland, the department decided to play it safe.

GOT NEW YORK TIP

New York Health Commissioner Leona Baumgartner telephoned blood bank officials in Lakeland and told them.

Miss Kell said she had played with the dog a month ago. It did not bite her, she said, but vigorously licked her hand.

Blood bank experts here reported they have never heard of a similar case, but said Miss Kell's blood donation certainly should not be used.

In Florida, the highway patrol tried to find Joyce Lowell of Dover, N.J., who is vacationing somewhere on the Florida east coast with her family.

She is the only one of the 82 students exposed to the dog that the college has been unable to locate and warn.

Bellboys And Policeman Share Large Estate

PHILADELPHIA (AP)—A traffic policeman and two bellhops have settled out of court a dispute involving disposition of the $1,200,000 estate of Mrs. Anna M. Haerer.

Under the agreement the three will split $200,000 and the balance will be divided among four charities.

The settlement ends a legal fight which began shortly after Mrs. Haerer's death in the Bellevue - Stratford Hotel, where she lived, July 29, 1955.

Two wills were filed for probate. One, written in 1944, left the widow's money to the charities.

In 1946, she signed a new will leaving her estate to William T. Miller, 63, a policeman on traffic duty outside the hotel for nearly 30 years; Anthony d'Ella, 51, Bellevue - Stratford bellboy captain for 30 years, and William B. Dexter, 68 a retired bellboy.

The charities contested the second will, said the three men exerted undue influence upon Mrs. Haerer, who died at the age of 80. In 1946, before writing the second will, a guardian had been placed over her assets.

Film Year Has Had Few Memorable High Spots

By BOB THOMAS

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — The Marie McDonald kidnapping, a bizarre chapter in the gaudy history of Hollywood, ranks as the top story in the big 10 news events of the movie world in 1957.

A survey of the year's news gives the nod to The Body, who started the new year with a blast on Jan. 4 by disappearing from her home. Trailing a string of frantic phone calls about kidnappers, she vanished for 24 hours, turning up in the California desert. The case has never been solved.

But apparently Marie's career problems were solved. The headlines propelled her to a comeback, and she reported she has earned $250,000 for singing appearances in TV and night clubs this year. This compares with virtually no earned income in 1956.

The other noteworthy events of 1957:

2. The Confidential magazine trial. Aided by the state of California, Hollywood had its showdown in court with the scandal magazine that has harrassed the film famous. The trial promised more than it produced; the all-star cast dwindled to Maureen O'Hara and Dorothy Dandridge.

Still, enough dirt was dredged up to titillate the scandal-hungry. The result was inconclusive — a hung jury — but Hollywood got Confidential's agreement with the state to get out of the scandal business.

3. Another Oscar for Ingrid Bergman. Hollywood demonstrated its disregard for scandal by giving its highest prize to the Swedish actress for her work in Anastasia. Miss Bergman remained in the news because of Roberto Rossellini's reported dalliance with an Indian girl. At year's end, the classic love affair of Bergman and Rossellini was over.

4. The marriage of Marlon Brando and Anna Kashfi. The wedding was surprise enough. It was followed by more news: Her parents' assertion that she was not Indian but just plain Joan O'Callaghan, the announcement that Anna was pregnant, reports that the couple had split.

5. The marriage of Bing Crosby and Kathy Grant. The unpredictable Groaner rekindled the old flame with the bright Texas beauty and eloped to Las Vegas, surprising everyone.

6. The death of Humphrey Bogart. One of filmdom's greatest stars fell victim to cancer Jan. 14 after a valiant struggle.

7. The death of Louis B. Mayer. Another colorful figure, the greatest of the star-makers, died of leukemia Oct. 29. He left his mark with the studio he helped found, Metro - Goldwyn - Mayer, and the dozens of stars he fostered — Garbo, Gable, Crawford, Harlow, Turner, Taylor, Etc.

8. The MGM proxy fight. Insurgent stockholders, ired at the decline of the studio, sought to overturn the management but were defeated.

9. The submerging of RKO. The General Tire interests, who bought the studio from Howard Hughes, sold the two lots to TV tycoon Desi Arnaz at a healthy profit.

10. Decline of the movie business. Not a news event in itself, this was an increasing trend which caused growing concern in Hollywood. Evidence: An ominous shutdown at Universal-International.
