Farm Separator.

The Creamery Journal is bent on making dairy farmers buy separators. It says:

It costs $1.50 per tub to haul the butter in the milk from the farm to the creamery.

We know of but two creameries in Iowa that run routes where it costs less. The average will be considerably more, probably not less than $1.75 to $2 a tub. The average haul will not exceed six miles.

Here is the great loss under the present creamery system. This is the great handicap in the strife for cheaper production.

The simple statement that it costs twice as much to haul a tub of butter in the milk from the farm to the creamery as it does to pay the freight from any Iowa point to New York city seems almost absurd. Yet it is the simple truth.

Were the commission on butter at 15 cents per pound, three times the present charge of 5 per cent, it would not be as great an item as is the cost of hauling the butter in the milk from the farm to the creamery.

When it is understood that it costs more to bring the butter in the milk from the farm to the factory than it costs at the present freight rate and price of butter to ship it from any Iowa point to New York, to pay the commission on it and then ship it to Liverpool, the disproportion of the charges becomes apparent.

We prophesy that in a few years the dairymen will look back on the times when they hauled loads of milk to the creamery and back, and paid the big money it costs for doing it, as most ridiculous.

The endless discussion in dairy papers of the cost of transportation, cost of selling goods on commission, wages of butter makers and cost of insurance is in the aggregate trivial in the face of the fact that in many of the creameries in Iowa the cost of hauling the milk at this time is over $300 a week.

Dairy and Creamery.

The duel between rival separators goes merrily on. One manufacturer calls the other a liar and that other retorts that the first one is a murderer and a horse thief, or words to that effect. It amuses the general public, which has about as much interest in the fight as the woman had in the historic contest between her husband and the bear. We wish, however, that the battle would take the shape of rate cutting, as such fights sometimes do in the case of rival railway lines. The dairy farmer would then quickly decide which separator was the best, and all farmers in the land would provide themselves with one or the other.

In no case does oilmeal seem to have a feeding value that warrants the dairyman in paying more than twice as much for it as for whey bran, and seldom that much. At twice the cost of wheat bran the oilmeal should be fed in quantities of not more than one to two pounds a day. The oilmeal and bran furnish the protein of the cow's food, a necessary part of the ration.

Professor Plumb of the Indiana station saw the Murchland milking machine in operation in Scotland this summer. He says it removes the milk by suction and its action seems very gentle and steady. He saw one fine cow that had been milked with this machine six years and she gave no sign of drying up her milk or of having her udder injured in the least.

When cows are kept on pasture alone, they sometimes get into the habit of gnawing bones and boards. This abnormal appetite is caused by a deficiency in the pasture grass of blood and bone making material. All the trouble in this direction may be obviated by feeding the pastured cows daily a ration of bran and a little oilmeal, which contain the phosphorus necessary to feed the bones.

Here is the biggest butter tale we have heard in some time. It is told that Mr. Ellery Weir of Buckingham, Conn., has two cows that in 23 months made 1,200 pounds of butter for market besides furnishing the family with all their milk and butter.
