

With the popularity of the new Harry Potter film, the item on every child's wish list this Christmas is - you guessed it - a robot! If you can't afford the $100000.00 US price tag on this Wilkinson Cyborg-Buddy, why not try and build one yourself using spare parts from shelving units and your kid's Nintendo 64.

Yep, that's a robot banana ($5000.00 US).

Knock knock!
Who's there?
Beep!
Beep who?
Beep Beep Beep Beep Beep!

If you want to throw the ultimate New Year's Eve party this year, rent KRIPPL XL and ZX23423.0 Comedy Matrix Version 3.1 ($500 per laugh) as your entertainment. This comedic duo will tickle your funny bone - I mean stimulate your humour processor with their unique blend of Abbot and Costello schtick with cutting edge technology. They're like Amos and Andy except they're robots!

Need to buy a gift for the person whose dog you just ran over with a car? Replace that messy little ball of bones with a robot. As you can see by the picture in the top left, a Braun K-9 ($43200.00 US) has an uncanny resemblance to an actual dog. And since blind people can't see (top right), they probably won't even notice the difference between a robotic seeing-eye dog and a real one.
