children and helping him make his fortune. The real test of a girl's attractiveness is in being able to charm a young man into assuming her board bill and shopping ticket for life. Occasionally a girl succeeds in making a man divorce his wife and marry her, but not often, and she seldom builds a home of happiness on the ruins of the home she has wrecked. Sometimes the girl falls so much in love with the married man who cannot and will not marry her that she ruins her own life by becoming a "back-street wife," or else she becomes sour and cynical with the knowledge that she has wasted all of her youth and beauty and enthusiasm on a man to whom she was one of many playthings, and who threw her away when he got tired of her.

And the silliest of girls must know that if she goes with married men single men will pass her up. She will be out of their class for one thing and, for another, the world always believes the worst of an affair between a girl and a married man, and not many young men want a married man's leavings. Every girl who goes out with married men does something that she prays no other girl will do to her when she marries.

DEAR DOROTHY DIX: What attitude is it possible to take toward old people whose ideas seem ugly and wrong to us and yet who are tied to us by bonds of blood or marriage? The Bible says: "Honor thy father and mother," yet I have found that the hardest of all the commandments to obey. Our minds expand by studying and reading and contact with life, while the minds of the old are static. How can one honor an outmoded, narrow and intolerant point of view? How can one honor a censorious attitude and mind that refuses new ideas? I have obeyed the command to honor my parents, and the unuttered, dull period have been a veritable torture. It seemed the only course at the time, yet I wonder whether it was wise.

MRS. H. C. L. ANSWER: Every kindly act is more than wise. It is a benediction that blesses those that give and those that receive, and I am sure that the knowledge that you showed your old parents tenderness instead of irritability; that you bit back the sharp speech, and that you made their last days happy will be among the things that you will like best to remember when you audit your account with life.

It does not seem to me that we are justified in taking any attitude toward the old except that of infinite patience and infinite kindness. And this is a hard saying because old age is not always sweet and lovely and appreciative. It is not even often so.

We may well remember that these old fathers and mothers scrimped and saved to give up the education they never had. But for them we might still have the closed mind that refuses new ideas; the narrow, intolerant point of view which we deride. They lifted us into a world above themselves and opened doors through which they knew they could never enter. And so the least that we can do is to make a few sacrifices for those who have made so many for us.

DEAR DOROTHY DIX: At what age is it advisable for a boy and girl to marry? Also what should be the minimum amount of the boy's salary?

DICK ANSWER: I do not think any boy and girl should marry until they are in their twenties, because up to that time they are immature and incapable of knowing what they want in a husband or wife. The amount of money that a young couple should have to marry on depends upon the scale of life to which they have been accustomed. It should cover the way they are willing to live, with a little over for emergencies and for the rainy day that is sure to come to us all.

DOROTHY DIX cannot personally reply to readers, but will answer letters of general interest through her column.

Re-opening Services Kensington Church

—Sunday, November 19th, 1950, marked the re-opening of Kensington Presbyterian Church, after extensive repairs and renovation.

Large congregations attended both morning and evening services, although unfavorable weather greeted the worshippers turning out at the earlier hour. The church, made beautiful with new inner walls and a handsome new end window, depicting the symbols of the bread and wine, and scenes in the life of our Lord, was further enhanced with a beautifully painted copy of the Presbyterian emblem, the Burning Bush, "Burning but not Consumed," and new hymn boards, marked with the Cross of St. George. On this auspicious occasion lovely bouquets of late blooming flowers had been placed about the altar and gave purpose to artistic corner brackets.

The minister, Rev. James A. McGowan, conducted the morning service, and preached a memorable sermon. Basing his words on the text found in the 28th verse of the 20th chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, "The Church of God," which He has purchased with His own Blood," Paul is seen on the way to Jerusalem, sending for the elders of the Church of Ephesus to come to him at Miletus, where the climax of his address to them dealt with one of the greatest of the conceptions which God had for the Church — Christ on the Cross, reconciling the world unto Himself. Other conceptions of the church, as pictured by Paul were cited by the minister, one "as the body of Christ," which he said "is the living organization through which the Lord still speaks. His message, still carries on His work of re-making the world; and finally as the church is made up of redeemed Christians, "Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Spirit."

Following Paul's own manner of preaching the Christ Crucified, the speaker quoted many passages of scripture, establishing beyond question that we are "bought with a price," and that price is the blood of Jesus. "In our text, Paul speaks of the church as an organization, Jesus Christ has purchased for Himself with His own Blood." The scene in the Upper Room tells the story of Jesus placing Himself in the place of the Pascal Lamb. Picturing Jesus dispensing the bread and wine, the speaker affirmed: "We cannot get away from this phrase—"which he has purchased with His own blood," without tearing both the gospels and epistles to shreds, for this conception runs through the whole New Testament." Followers of Christ down through the centuries have held to that belief, and the "Sanctuary standing, as a symbol of the church, it is only right that we should make it beautiful," in recognition of God's great love for us. The sacrificial love brought Paul face to face with Christ. "That same love is seeking us, Him that cometh I will in no wise cast out. Not only will He accept you, He will re-make you, to Mr. McGowan's value in the Presbytery, and voiced regret that he should be leaving its ranks for service elsewhere.

Taking for his text the words found in the 13th chapter of Corinthians, verse 12, "Now we see through a Glass Darkly," his sermon dealt with the mysteries of the world we live in, which, he said becomes more mysterious, the older a person grows. Telling a boy that when he grows up he will understand more, is only half-truth, for we find that the more the scientist learn the more mysterious life becomes. Long ago, it was believed the earth was flat, and people were content. Then it was found to be round and revolving, and the nearest star was found to be trillions of miles away. Like the light from a great bonfire, which makes the surroundings appear darker, so is the comparatively little knowledge which has been learned. "However the truth always proves to be better and more wonderful than the original conception."

Religion, he said does not solve mysteries, and great harm is done by those who say it does. "At the very core of our religion is the greatest mystery, the loveliest life ever to come to this earth was crucified. Love was killed by hate" The bible recognizes the mysteries of life in many passages, but faces up to it, and faces to the fact, as we must that "there is always enough light to live by, however dark and unfathomable life may seem at the moment."

Bewildering as life's mysteries must be to all of us, the speaker advanced the thought of how awful it would be if the world and its meaning were so shallow that we could see and understand all of its depths. Life and its mysteries present a challenge, and we are given strength and courage to meet it. "The Lord Gives us enough Light to Rise by and we Rise." The solo, "Beside Still Waters" was very sweetly rendered by Mrs. Bruce MacPherson.

The choir presented the beautiful anthem, "Praise the Lord," with Mrs. Feagh Sudsby, Mrs. Horace Paynter and Mr. Edson Raynor as soloists.—Bur

If careful. Once when Pilot was half grown he and two others of his own size had wandered into that channel and followed it until at last they had come out into the open ocean again at the other end of that long island. It had been a great adventure. He never had tried it again, but he never had forgotten it.

He was remembering it now as he led the others in their frantic rush to escape the Terrible One. The water in that channel might not be deep enough now that he was so much bigger than that long-ago day, but it offered the only hope of escape. So he was piloting the way, living up to his name, and his frightened followers were blindly following him.

A Country Garden

Continued from page 2 seedlings and the Hybrid Tea Roses must be covered or they will every one be killed over the winter.

They must be covered with earth brought from another part of the garden and this should be left until all danger from frost is past; in this climate it is about the middle of May before it is safe to take away the winter protection. It is best to take it away gradually and on a dull day as the sun is apt to scald the tender stems.

Those tea roses are still blooming in the garden and are worth all this trouble. Pansies have been planted this week and they will bloom as soon as the snow has gone in the spring.

Winter blooming house plants are taking on new life these sunny days and the Paper White Narcissus is fragrant and lovely; these bulbs were planted in bowls for the house several weeks ago and they are grown in the light without any time in the dark. They will grow in pebbles and water but they will not grow in the garden and there are golden yellow flowers as well as the better known paperwhite. Coming at this time of year when other flowers and bulbs are not in bloom they are very welcome.

A reader asked me to write something about the culture of the African Violet and I shall try to do so next week and I feel sorry that the busy summer prevented me from looking up this information soon after the request came in by mail. Some good gardeners I know how grown beautiful violets but there are many methods and we shall talk about them when I have obtained the knowledge from the experience of others.

TOO TIRED TO PRAY

She thought when night had finally ended day "Dear Lord, tonight I am too tired to pray."

And wearily she closed her eyes in sleep, Slipping far into the shadowed deep, Up in Heaven the dear Lord heard and smiled.

"Today she soothed a little, crying child, She stopped her work to take old Ella Kloop A fragrant, warming bowl of her good soup. Her house was orderly, her garden tended.

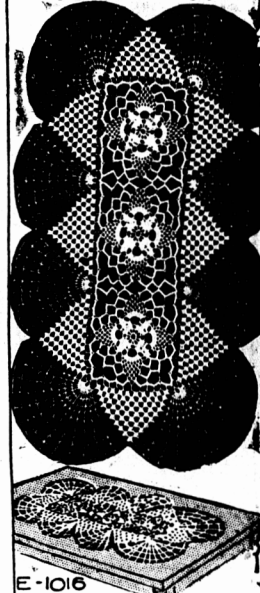

Her children fed, their clothes all clean and mended, Her husband came home from work, found happiness.

And quiet peace in her deep gentleness." The dear Lord smiled again—"Too tired to pray?"

Ter hands have offered prayers of love all day." —Jane Coffin.
