Cough medicines, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in greater demand than ever. No preparation for Throat and Lung Troubles is so prompt in its effects, so agreeable to the taste, and so widely known, as this. It is the family medicine in thousands of households.

"I have suffered for years from a bronchial trouble that, whenever I take cold or am exposed to inclement weather, shows itself by a very annoying tickling sensation in the throat and by difficulty in breathing. I have tried a great many remedies, but none does so well as Ayer's Cherry Pectoral which always gives prompt relief. Returns of my old complaint."—Ernest A. Hepler, Inspector of Public Roads, Parish Terre Bonne, La.

"I consider Ayer's Cherry Pectoral a most important remedy

For Home Use.

I have tested its curative power, in my family, many times during the past thirty years, and have never known it to fail. It will relieve the most serious affections of the throat and lungs, whether in children or adults."—Mrs. E. G. Edgerly, Council Bluffs, Iowa.

"Twenty years ago I was troubled with a disease of the lungs. Doctors afforded me no relief and considered my case hopeless. I then began to use Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and before I had finished one bottle, found relief. I continued to take this medicine until a cure was effected. I believe that Ayer's Cherry Pectoral saved my life."—Samuel Griggs, Waukegan, Ill.

"Six years ago I contracted a severe cold, which settled on my lungs and soon developed into the alarming symptoms of Consumption. I had a cough, night sweats, bleeding of the lungs, pains in chest and sides, and was so prostrated as to be confined to my bed most of the time. After trying various prescriptions, without benefit, my physician finally determined to give me Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I took it, and the effect was magical. I seemed to rally from the first dose of this medicine, and after using only three bottles, am as well and sound as ever."—Rodney Johnson, Springfield, Ill.

THE FAIR GOD.

BOOK TWO.

Thereupon he fell to reflecting and smoking, and when next he spoke it was from the midst of an aromatic cloud.

"I love the wise Hualpilli; for his sake I would have his children happy. He was a lover of peace, and gave more to policy than to war. It were grievous to let his city be disturbed by feuds and fighting men, therefore I gave it to the eldest son. His claim was best, and besides, he had the friendly heart to serve me. Still—still I wish there had been two Tezucos."

"There was but one voice about the judgment in Tezucuo, O king. The citizens all said it was just."

"And they could have said the same if I had given them Itz'li. I know the knave, uncle. It was not their applause I cared for, but you see, in gaining a servant, I lost one. Itz'li is a warrior. Had he the will he could serve in the field as well as his brother in the council. I must attach him to me. A strong arm is pleasant to lean on. It is better than a staff.

Addressing himself to the pipe again, he sat smoking, and moodily observing the vapor vanish above him. There was silence until Itz'li was ushered in.

The cacique was still suffering from his wounds. His step was feeble, so that his entrance was stopped by the monarch himself.

Let the salutation go, my lord Itz'li! Your courage has cost you much. I remember you are the son of my old warrior, and bid you welcome.

"The Tlascalans are good friends," said the Tezucan coldly.

"And for that reason better victims," added the king, quickly. "By the Sun, I know not what we would do without them. Their hills supply our goods."

"And I, too, king—I am but a warrior. My heart is not softened by things pertaining to religion. Enough for me to worship the gods."

"Then you are not a student?"

"I never studied in the academies."

"I understand," said the king, with a low laugh. "You cannot name as many stars as enemies whom you have slain. No matter. I have places for such scholars. Have you commanded an army?"

"It pleased you to give me that confidence. I led my companies within the Tlascalan wall and came back with captives."

"I recollect now. But as most good warriors are modest, my son, I will not tell you what the chiefs said of your conduct; you would blush."

Itz'li started.

"Content you, content you; your blush would not be for shame."

There was a pause, which the king gave to his pipe. Suddenly he said: "There have been tongues busy with your fame, my son. I have heard you were greatly dissatisfied because I gave your father's city to your elder brother. But I consider that men are never without detractors, and I cannot forget that you have perilled your life for the gods. Actions I accept as the proofs of will. If the favor that brought you here be reasonable, it is yours for the asking. I have the wish to serve you."

"I am not surprised that I have enemies," said Itz'li calmly. "I will abuse no one on that account; for I am an enemy, and can forgive in others what I deem virtue in myself. But it moves me greatly, O king, that my enemies should steal into your palace, and in my absence, wrong me in your opinion. But pardon me; I did not come to defend myself."

"You have taken my words in an evil sense," interposed the king, with an impatient gesture.

"Or to conceal the truth," the Tezucan continued. "There is kindly blood in me, and I dare speak as my father's son. So if they said merely that I was dissatisfied with your judgment, they said truly."

Montezuma frowned.

"I intend my words to be respectful, most mighty king. A common wisdom teaches us to respect the brave man and dread the coward. And there is not in your garden a flower as beautiful, nor in your power a privilege as precious as free speech; and it would sound ill of one so great and secure as my father's friend if he permitted in the streets and in the farmer's hut what he forbade in his palace. I was spoke of dissatisfaction; but think not it was because you gave Tezucuo to my brother, and to me the bare hills that have scarcely herbage enough for a wolf-covet. I am less a prince than a warrior; all places are alike to me; the earth affords me royal slumber, while no jewelled canopy is equal to the starred heavens; and there is a weakness in pleasant memories, as there is none, to such as I am, O king, what matters a barren hill or a proud palace? I murmured, nay, I did more, because, in judging my quarrel, you overthrew the independence of my country. When my father visited you from across the lake, he was not accustomed to stand before you, or hide his kingly robes beneath a slave's garb."

Montezuma half started from his seat. "Holy gods! Is rebellion so bold?"

"I meant no disrespect, great king. I only sought to justify myself, and in your royal presence say what I have thought while fighting under your banner. But, without more abuse of your patience, I will to my purpose, especially as I came for peace and friendship."

"The son of my friend forgets that I have ways to make peace without treating for it," said the king.

The Tezucan smothered an angry reply. "By service done, I have shown a disposition to serve you, O king. Very soon every warrior will be needed. A throne may be laid amid hymns and priestly prayers, yet have no strength; to endure, it must rest upon the allegiance of love. I trust I have spoken unpleasant words, I came to ask that by a simple boon, you give me cause to love. I have reflected that I, too, am of royal blood, and, as the son of a king, may lead your armies, and ask for alliance in your house. By marriage, O king, I desire, come good or evil, to link my fortune to yours."

Montezuma's countenance was stolid; no eye could have detected upon it so much as surprise. He quietly asked, "which of my daughters has favored in your eyes?"

"They are all beautiful, but only one of them is fitted for a warrior's wife."

"Tula?"

Itz'li bowed.

"She is dear to me," said the king, softly, "dearer than a city; she is holy as a temple and lovelier than the morning; her voice is sweet as the summer wind, and her presence as the summer itself. Have you spoken to her of this thing?"

"I love her, so that her love is nothing to me. Her feelings are her own, but she is yours; and you are more powerful to give than she to withhold."

"Well, well," said the monarch, after a little thought; "in my realm there are none of better quality than the children of Hualpilli—none from whom such demand is as proper. Yet it is worth of deliberation. It is true. I have the power to bestow, but there are others who have the right to be consulted. I study the happiness of my people, and it were unnatural if I cared less for that of my children. So leave me now, but take with you, brave prince, the assurance that I am friendly to your suit. The gods go with you!"

And Itz'li, after a low obeisance, withdrew; and then the overture was fully discussed. Montezuma spoke freely, welcoming the opportunity of securing the bold, free-spoken cacique, and seeing in the demand only a question of policy. As might be expected, the ancients made no opposition; they could see no danger in the alliance, and had no care for the parties. It was policy.

CHAPTER III.

THE BANISHMENT OF GUATAMAZIN.

The palace of Montezuma was regarded as of very great sanctity, so that his household, its economy, and the exact relation its members bore to each other were mysteries to the public. From the best information, however, it would seem that he had two lawful and acknowledged wives, the queens Tecalco and Acatlan, who, with their families, occupied spacious apartments secure from intrusion. They were good-looking, middle-aged women, whom the monarch honored with the highest respect and confidence. By the first one, he had a son and daughter; by the second two daughters.

"Help me, Acatlan! I appeal to your friendship, to the love you bear your children—help me in my trouble." So the queen Tecalco prayed the queen Acatlan in the palace the morning after the audience given the Tezucan by the king.

The two were sitting in a room furnished with some state. Through the great windows, shaded by purple curtains, streamed the fresh breath of the early day. There were female slaves around them in waiting; while a boy nearly grown, at the eastern end of the apartment, was pitching the golden balls in tololoque. This was prince Io, the brother of Tula, and son of Tecalco.

"What is the trouble? What can I do?" asked Acatlan.

"Listen to me," said Tecalco. "The king has just gone. He came in better mood than usual, and talked pleasantly. Something had happened; some point of policy had been gained. Now-a-days, you know, he talks and thinks of nothing but policy; formerly it was all of war. We cannot deny Acatlan, that he is much changed. Well, he played a game with Io, then sat down, saying he had news which he thought would please me. You will hardly believe it, but he said that Itz'li, the proud Tezucan, asked Tula in marriage last night. Think of it! Tula, my blossom, my soul! and to that vile cacique."

"Well, he is brave, and the son of Hualpilli," said Acatlan.

"What! You!" said Tecalco despairingly. "Do you, too, turn against me? I do not like him, and would not if he were the son of God. Tula hates him!"

"I will not turn against you, Tecalco. Be calmer, and tell me what more the king said."

"I told him I was surprised, but not glad to hear the news. He frowned, and paced the floor, now here, now there. I was frightened, but could bear his anger better than the idea of my Tula, so good, so beautiful, the wife of the base Tezucan. He said the marriage must go on; it was required by policy, and would quiet the Empire, which was never so threatened. You will hardly believe I ventured to tell him that it should not be, as Tula was already contracted to Guatamazin. I supposed that announcement would quiet the matter, but it only enraged him; he spoke bitterly of the 'tzin. I could scarcely believe my ears. He used to love him. What has happened to change his feeling?"

A correspondent in London apprehends war on the advent of spring. He says there are two substantial facts upon which his apprehension is based: (1) The Russian loan of $100,000,000, the bulk of which will be raised in France (2) changes in the Russian army and its distribution along the Western frontier. Besides, the warlike young William's presence on the German throne adds an eccentric and disturbing element to the situation. Yet it is possible that the unexpected may happen and peace be maintained.
