IN MEMORIAM

In loving memory of Mrs. Alton J. Bell, Long River, who departed this life on November 19th, 1948.

There's a heavenly gate at the end of the road. Through which each must walk alone.

Beyond that gate, our loved one Found happiness and rest, And there is comfort in that thought That a loving God knows best.

Dear Olive who left us lonely Watch us through the gates ajar; There's a wife and a mother Gone within those gates ajar.

Peaceful be thy sleep, dear Olive It is sweet to breathe thy name In life we loved you dearly In death we do the same.

Ever Remembered by Husband and Children, Alton, Laura, Leigh, Eric.

IN MEMORIAM

In loving memory of Mrs. Alton Bell who departed this life November 19th, 1948.

In our hearts your memory lingers Always tender, and true, There is not a day, dear sister, We do not think of you.

Lovingly Remembered by Father, Brothers and Sisters.

IN MEMORIAM

In loving memory of Mrs. Alton J. Bell, of Long River, who passed away on November 19th, 1948.

God only knows the loneliness, That fills our hearts today, When a friend we thought so much of From this world God called away.

Ever Remembered by Ruth and Kenneth.

Tomorrow's Promise

By Temple Bailey

When the car came, Anne went with her father to the door. "Why go?" she asked. "It's much nicer here."

"You are wanted, Daddy." "By you? Darling child, I know." He kissed her and held her close.

"There was always a reason. Anne's mother asked no questions and seemed indifferent. Hitherto Anne had taken his absence as a matter of course, but tonight she wished he might have finished the evening out with chess and Vicky."

"What could happen?" She turned and ran into the house, as if to outdistance the turmoil in her mind. Vicky was in the living room, looking on the shelves for a French novel. "Your mother has gone upstairs," she said, "to change her dress."

"I thought she looked lovely." "She said she hated black."

"I should think she'd have thought of that before she put it on."

"Oh, don't be stuffy Vicky." "We'll be here to make you mind your morals and your manners, and incidentally your grammar." Vicky selected a book and turned a smiling face. "What are you going to do while we read?"

"I may walk to the top of the hill."

"Again? What frightened you when you were there?" "Oh-nothing."

Vicky let it go at that. There was obviously something in the air, but some day Anne would tell her all about it. She always did.

It was because of her conversation with Vicky that Anne came late to the hill and found Garry there before her. She went running to meet him and he caught up her hands and kissed them.

"Why pretend anything?" "Isn't all life just pretending?" He was impatient. "I didn't bring you here to discuss platitudes."

"You know what I mean." She was silent for a moment. Then she said, "Oh, Garry, isn't it enough just for us two to be alone in this wonderful world?"

"It's not enough for me." His arm went about her shoulders. Eluding him, she felt a vague sense of disappointment. She had not known just what she expected, but it had been something more than mere lovemaking. She sat down under the great oak that crowned the hill, "talk to me, Garry."

"I have only one theme. You know that, Anne."

"She did not answer. Garry threw himself down beside her. "Tell me you love me."

"Anne, you're mine! I'll show you a new world when we're married. We'll open up the old house on the hill, and you'll be the beauty of the countryside."

"I don't want to be the beauty of the countryside. Mother was for years. And now younger women are coming along and it's dreadful."

"Oh, Mother hates it. To see them get all the admiration."

"Your mother is still a great beauty."

"Yes, but marriage means more to me than being the toast of the hunt clubs. I'm not criticizing Mother. But I'm different." She stopped suddenly. "What's that?"

His eyes followed her pointing finger, sloping down from the hill to the east was a great meadow, amber and amethyst under the moon, and solid and black as an ebony cliff against the brightness loomed the pine grove. It was to the right of the grove that Anne pointed, where a spiral of smoke arose from the grasses.
