Opening lead—seven of hearts. A few years ago a British Columbia team journeyed to Seattle to play a team-of-eight match against a Pacific Northwest team. The Americans won the 64-board match by 4,240 points. One hand played brought a most amazing variety of results and simply proves how the minds of bridge players run in different channels. At one table, the bidding went as shown. The American South got doubled at five clubs, which North redoubled, and had no trouble making thirteen tricks for a score of 1,150 points. A heart was opened. Dummy won and the ace of spades was cashed. South discarding his other heart. After leading the ace of diamonds, a low club was played and finessed. Declarer then ruffed a small diamond, led the ten of clubs which won, and repeated the finesse, picking up East's king. When the diamonds then divided favorably, the Canadian East-West pair had no tricks to show for their double. At the second table, something strange happened. All four players passed. This on a hand which contained a grand slam. For some reason, the American North didn't think his hand good enough to open (only 12 high card points, you see), and South, scared to death of the missing major suits and with only 11 high card points, also passed. At the third table, the American West opened with three spades. Everybody passed. Three spades was made with 100 honors as the Canadian pair, with thirteen tricks at their disposal, did not utter a peep. At the fourth table, the American West also opened three spades. This came around to South who decided to put up a fight. He bid four diamonds, which bought the contract. Somehow or other he wound up down two—minus 100 points. All told, the winners gained 1,490 points on the deal, but could have done much better if they had not passed out a grand slam.

88 Power Reactors Will Supply U. S. Requirements

WASHINGTON (AP)—The United States leads in the program to develop "safe, efficient and competitive" electric power from atomic fission, Chairman Lewis L. Strauss of the Atomic Energy Commission said Wednesday. He also said the United States and Britain have made considerable progress toward taming the H-bomb reaction, atomic fusion—as another source of power. Strauss, at a press conference, offered no timetable on when industrial power from fission might become economical. But he said practical peacetime power from hydrogen or thermonuclear energy is "years and years" away. Strauss reported the AEC has built and operated 23 fission reactors in the U.S. for the production of power for civilian and military uses. Forty-four are under construction and 21 are under development or in the planning stage, he said. "The total of 88 power reactors represents a program which, to our knowledge, is not approached by any other country, either in performance or planning." In saying progress has been made by the United States and Britain towards harnessing the hydrogen reaction, Strauss declared that "temperatures of considerable magnitude have been reached." He did not specify the degree, but several months ago, the United States and Britain indicated attainment of temperatures of "several million" de-

DAILY KRYPTOQUOTE — Here's how to work it:
A X Y D L B A A X R
is LONG FELLOW

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophes, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.
