

Marlborough House Has New Commonwealth Role

By DOUG MARSHALL LONDON (CP)—Marlborough House, the new Commonwealth centre in London, was officially handed over to the Commonwealth Relations Office after a visit by the Queen.

The house, built originally in 1711 for Sarah, Duchess of Marlborough, and then by Queen Mary's residence, was made available by the Queen by Royal warrant in 1963.

Modernized and redecorated at a cost of £230,000 by the British government, it now will be the meeting place for all future Commonwealth conferences.

The interior retains its 18th-century atmosphere but now contains a 95-seat conference chamber and 18 lavish committee rooms.

George Drew, Canada's high commissioner in London, addressed the opening ceremony presided over by high commissioners.

In a speech recorded for broadcast in Canada, he said the Commonwealth centre "is a very significant milestone along the upward path of this great partnership."

"Her majesty could have done nothing which more clearly expresses her leadership of a united Commonwealth than to give this historical building which for more than a century has been the home of members of the Royal Family."

MEETS CORRESPONDENTS During the ceremony a number of Commonwealth press correspondents were present.

Opposite hand - King of hearts in most hands played in suit. Contracting the declarer makes a preliminary estimate of his chances by counting losers. Ex- perience tells him that it is casier to know where he stands if he thinks in terms of losers rather than winners.

However, this practice is only one of convenience and does not necessarily reflect the number of tricks he can really win. Consider this hand, for example.
