Hadad Family Is Reunited

QUEBEC, June 24—(C.P.)—The Hadad family travelled towards their Stellarton, N.S., home tonight, reunited after a separation of 10 years.

The family separated when Jacob Hadad left Syria to establish a Canadian home. Mrs. Hadad, their 14-year-old son and 10 year old daughter, born three months after Hadad emigrated, arrived here Sunday on the liner Aurania.

There were smiles and flashes of dark eyes as Mrs. Hadad and her children, dressed in Syrian fashion came down the gang-plank to be met by her husband, and it was a shy little girl who was kissed on both cheeks by the father she had never seen before.

Mrs. Hadad received her first lesson in Canadian customs before leaving Quebec. As the family approached their automobile, Mrs. Haded, following Syrian custom, stepped aside to allow her husband to enter. With Canadian courtesy, Hadad helped her into the car, then entered himself.

LIKENS LIQUOR SMUGGLING TO CIVIL WAR

Senator Hughes Urges Reduction In Customs And Excise Duties To Curb Evil.

Following is the text of Senator Hughes' remarks on the third reading of a bill to amend the Customs Act (Canadian Waters) in the Senate June 15, to which brief reference was made in these columns a few days ago:

Hon. J. J. Hughes: "Honourable senators, the Bill before the House for third reading will, when it becomes law, give the Preventive Service much greater power than it has now. In fact, so much is its power to be enlarged that some members of the Banking and Commerce Committee feared that if all these powers were exercised they would hamper the legitimate trade and commerce of the country. The Preventive Service asked for these new powers so that it could cope with the evil of smuggling and illicit home-brewing of malt and spirituous liquors. This evil is not indigenuous to our country, nor did we have it with us in its present intensity for many years before the War. As it stands now, it was caused by an Act of Parliament passed, with the best of intentions, during the late War, which raised the customs and excise duties on malt and spirituous liquors to unprecedented heights. If we once realized the extent of the evil and the difficulty of coping with it, the proper or best cure would almost suggest itself, namely, repeal of the laws which caused it.

"The evil has taken on almost the proportions of a small civil war, employing some of the modern weapons of war, on land, on sea and in the air. It has divided the people into two camps, one camp trying to suppress it, the other actively engaged in it or sympathizing with it. It has given rise to anger, hatred, ill-will, strife, perjury and other evils—all contrary to peace, order and good government. It is an unmitigated evil. Smuggling is found to a great extent on the coasts because of natural conditions, while home-brewing is more extensively followed in the interior.

A Costly Effort

"General MacBrien told us, at the hearing before the Banking and Commerce Committee, that the effort to cope with the evil was costing the country a direct outlay of more than a million dollars a year, and that to meet the situation effectively would require an additional expenditure of at least $250,000 or $300,000. I am sure that I am well within the mark when I say that the indirect cost to the country is more than the direct cost—perhaps twice as much; but, great as that cost is, it is in my opinion nothing to the demoralizing effect the illicit traffic has on the character of many of our people. That, as I see it, cannot be calculated in terms of money; and I greatly fear that while so large a proportion of our people sympathize with the traffic and either actively or passively suport it, it cannot be suppressed by force. Even General MacBrien's hopes are limited, for he told us before the Banking and Commerce Committee that while he expected to curtail the smuggling end of the business he feared that the curtailment itself would increase the home-brewing.

"Some people think the revenue of the country would suffer if duties were reduced to a figure that would take away the incentive to smuggle and home-brew. I doubt that the revenue would suffer by such a reduction. I feel that I should be quite safe in saying that two-thirds of the liquors consumed now pay no duty. But even if the revenue would suffer to some extent, surely no Government would think of raising revenue by methods that would demoralize the character of its citizens.

"I feel it to be my duty to make these observations at this stage, because I fear this evil will not be cured by the methods we are adopting, and I really believe that if the members would take the time to consider the business thoroughly other methods would be adopted.

"Some eight years ago, when we enlarged the powers of the Preventive Service, Mr. Breadner, who was then Commissioner of Customs, and Mr. Cowan, an official of the Preventive Service, told us they felt sure they could stop smuggling and illicit home-brewing if they got the law they were asking for. Two years later Mr. Breadner told me they had been defeated; that the only way to stop the business was to make a drastic reduction of the duties. General MacBrien says virtualy the same thing now. Under these circumstances the only thing we can do now is to watch this legislation and its effects. If it fails—I hope it will not—perhaps the Government of the day will apply the remedy that should have been applied some years ago."

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time, and passed.

French Government Moves To Strengthen The League

PARIS, June 23—The Socialist Government opened a fight to strengthen the League of Nations and France's position in Europe, backed by a vote of confidence from the Chamber of Deputies.

The Deputies approved Premier Leon Blum's declaration of foreign policy, made today, by a vote of 382 to 198 after a 10-hour debate.

In its first declaration of foreign policy, the Leftist cabinet proposed:

1. That war be made on an aggressor by a group of League powers, "whether the grouping results from a given geographical situation or from a community of interests."

2. That League members be given the right to take "preventive measures" in the event aggression was threatened.

Under the first proposal France could keep her close alliances with Soviet Russia and the Little Entente.

The second proposal, involving a change in the League Covenant, would allow France to mobilize if a German attack was believed imminent.

Today's declaration, made by Premier Blum and Foreign Minister Yvon Delbos in the Senate and Chamber of Deputies, explained France's willingness to remove sanctions from Italy and announced the government would move to hasten the negotiation of three mutual asisstance pacts under the League.

Labor Vote Of Censure In British House Rejected

LONDON, June 23—The House of Commons gave the Government a vote of confidence tonight after Prime Minister Baldwin had warned that "nothing but military action can now make any difference in the status of Italy and Abyssinia."

The House rejected the Labor party's motion of censure by a vote of 384 to 170.

"It is obvious," the Prime Minister declared in winding up the debate, "that sanctions could not continue forever. The Government has rejected the idea of continuing and intensifying them because nothing but military action can now make any difference in the status of Italy and Abyssinia.

"The League has received a bad setback, but failure in the first attempt to apply collective security in no wise means the death of the League."

Mr. Baldwin received loud cheers from his followers when he paid tribute to Foreign Secretary Eden.

"He has been heart and soul in the struggle to maintain the League and I know the disappointment to him has been keen," the Prime Minister said.

In regard to the future of the League, the Prime Minister told the House "we must see how far we can make collective security a reality."

"The Government's policy is still based on the League", he said, "and this matter must be taken up at the September meeting."

STRIKERS RIOT IN OHIO

One Killed and Four Wounded In Portsmouth Disorders.

(A. P. by Guardian's Special Wire)

PORTSMOUTH, O., June 23—Bullets killed a guard and wounded four other men today in a clash between strikers and company guards at the closed Wheeling Steel Corporation plant in nearby New Boston.

Half a dozen other persons suffered minor injuries during the encounter.

More than 300 shots were fired when company guards attempted to transport food on a locomotive and gondola to workers besieged inside the company's wire mill since the strike began May 22.

The slain man was George Meyers, 38, one of eight guards aboard the locomotive when it started down a three-block line from the main plant to the wire mill.

While officers pleaded vainly with a throng of strikers to disperse, a furious crowd of men pried apart and destroyed the railway tracks.

No strikers were wounded.

Fly Mathematics

Fly can become a Great, Great, Great, Grandmother in only a few weeks

A single female fly usually lays 600 to 1000 eggs in her lifetime. Under favourable conditions these eggs hatch in ten or twelve days and there is an opportunity for seven or more generations in a season! In other words, this single fly can produce in only three generations, a few weeks apart, as many as one billion disease carrying menaces to health.

It is obvious that every effort should be put forth to destroy the first flies of the season. Each of the early flies killed means destruction of potential swarms.

As a menace to health, to say nothing of its disgusting loathsomeness, the fly is known to be a carrier of the germs of summer diarrhoea, typhoid and other serious diseases. And, although sanitation efforts have been instituted to curb many sources of contageous diseases, there has been little success in eradicating the common house-fly

It is a matter requiring personal effort to keep the home clear of flies. The elimination of possible breeding places such as uncovered garbage, refuse, manure, rotting leaves, screens on doors and windows and covering of all foods, are all necessary precautions. But should flies enter the home, a few Wilson's Fly Pads, used regularly according to directions will kill them all in a few hours.
