N.S. Minister Discloses Plans To Boost Economy

SYDNEY, N.S. (CP) — G. I. Smith, minister of the new Nova Scotia department of finance and economics, has disclosed proposals for an organization aimed at stimulating economic growth.

The former Nova Scotia highways minister said in an address to the 57th annual conference of the Union of Nova Scotia Municipalities, "we propose that this machinery shall take the form of an organization for planning both in the private and public sectors of our economy."

He said consideration is now being given to "the exact form this organization should take. It is hoped an announcement along these lines will be possible soon."

Mr. Smith suggested it will take some time before the organization's activities can be extended over the whole economy of the province, "though this will be the long term aim, if future study and experience indicates it is feasible to do so."

In the near future, "we expect to turn to certain sectors of the economy where there seems to be a marked potential for growth."

He described plans for the organization as "a new concept to Nova Scotians. Indeed, so far as I am aware, our province is the first in North America to embark on such a course."

EXAMINATION GIVEN

Mr. Smith said examination has been given "the organization for planning which has been so successful in France over the last 15 years and the organization in the United Kingdom which is just now getting under way."

Economic growth did not depend solely on decision and policies of government. He said it might be that decisions made in the "private sector outweigh those of the government in their relative importance to growth.

"But governments, without impinging upon private rights, can and I believe should, today, take a more vigorous role in helping the private sector to perform at its optimum capacity, helping to plan for increasing growth, and helping to coordinate activities and plans in the public and private sectors.

"This help, of course, should be in the nature of co-operation, not compulsion.

"There is a need to study centrally the potential, the plans, and the prospects of our main industries, to correlate them with each other and the government's plans for the public sector, and to see how in aggregate they contribute to and fit in with the prospects of the economy as a whole."

Mr. Smith said that it was appreciated that "what is appropriate in this connection" for a completely sovereign state with central control over all monetary and fiscal matters, is not necessarily appropriate to a province of Canada.

"We believe, however, that there is a substantial field within which a province with its limited jurisdiction can do a great deal along this line."

A text of Mr. Smith's speech was released to the press in advance of delivery.
