A PRAYER FOR A MOTORIST

Grant me a steady hand and a watchful eye That no man shall be hurt as I pass by. Thou gavest life; I pray no act of mine May take away or mar that gift of Thine. Shelter those, Lord, who bear me company From ill of fire and all calamity, Teach me to use my car for others' need, Nor miss, thru love of speed, The beauties of Thy world.

Rice for the Invalid

When every article of food should be as nourishing as possible for the convalescent it is time to boil the rice in milk. A cup of rice will absorb about 4 cups of milk when cooked in the double boiler, but it will result in a wonderfully nourishing food.

Sometimes a high polish is desired on linens. To obtain this use lukewarm water instead of cold when mixing the starch. Mix to the desired thickness with boiling water, add 1-2 teaspoon salt and stir with a white wax candle. Proceed with starching as usual. This will give cheaper linens a much finer appearance.

A Few Fashion Trends

The emphasis on sheers, silks and rayons in plain colors rather than printed or woven effects. The rise of cottons, especially plaques, gingham checks and heavy sports types. The tremendous growth of the use of accessory trimmings, such as narrow lace edgings, lace bandings, ribbons, eyelet embroideries.

During damp weather brass namings are hard to keep bright. Rub them over with a cloth soaked in olive oil. When a bright color comes along this is very easily rubbed off and the brass can be clean in the usual way, as the oil has prevented discoloration.

When washing colored things is wise to put a little salt in the water as this has tendency to "fix" the color. Pure silks are the easiest materials to wash, for they need little rubbing, and can be done thoroughly and then damp-dried in the same way as linen. Organic muslin should be ironed almost soon as it is washed, while still wet. This makes it crisp, and you will not need to starch it in order to retain its stiffness.

Fill your aluminum saucepan with water and chop up a fair-size stick of rhubarb. Put this in an boil for two or three minutes. When you have done one saucepan with this mixture pour it into another, and so on, until you have brightened all of them.

Modern Etiquette

(By ROBERTA LEE)

Q. Isn't an envious person unpopular?

A. Yes, always. An old Latin proverb says, "He who envies another admits his own inferiority." And course it is difficult for an inferior person to become popular.

Q. Should a girl ever send a present to a man whom she likes?

A. Not unless she is engaged to be married to this man, and then the only gifts necessary are Christmas and on his birthday. Q. Who is usually the last one to make a speech at a public dinner?

A. The guest of honor, or the most prominent person present, who is seated at the hostmaster's right, is usually asked to speak last.

Make Slip Covers for New Color Effects

Easy to Get Good Fit

Tired of the old color scheme? Change it easily—at little cost—by making lovely new slip covers. How delightfully this green-carpeted room was transformed—simply by covering the faded run upholstery.

The clever housewife decried the small chair in green cotton crash with navy ball fringe. For the armchair she chose a pretty floral cerise in greens, deep, clear blues, grays.

Her color scheme has been a joy this summer and, fascinated by her success, she's starting raspberry brocade covers for fall.

Thanks to the pin-on method of fitting, such smart slip covers can be made easily, quickly. Just smooth fabric over upholstery, pin along chair edges and cut 1/4 inches outside pins for seams.

Our 32-page booklet gives step-by-step lessons, clear diagrams, for trim slip covers. Tells how to estimate, choose, cut materials. Directions for fitting, sewing, finishing. How to make chair pads, auto seat covers, too.

Memoirs of A Child (Edith Fisher)

AN EXCURSION

When I went down to play in the street, Mother always had me report to her every fifteen minutes. This always gave her the assurance that I was safe. Children could play with safety on the streets in those years because the traffic was not so bad, it was a question of being kidnapped that we were afraid of.

One morning as I sat on the doorstep in my crisp new white frock and wishing I had someone to talk to, one of my Mother's friends came along and greeted me. She was a young lady still in her teens but was known to be very absent-minded. She begged me to join her as she had a little shopping to do. I did not want to refuse and so we tramped around all morning, from store to store. When my fifteen minutes for reporting was up, I can picture Mother's anxiety not to find me there and our maid running around from street to street calling me.

We had shopped around for a long time and were far from home. It seemed a good many hours to me and I was getting worried. "How would you like to cross a Ferry-boat and visit my Aunt?" she inquired. I have never been on a ferry-boat and was very anxious for such an adventure. For a moment I had quite forgotten that I had a Mother and Father and the young lady made no effort to remind me. She was anxious to visit her Aunt and wanted a companion to travel with.

A small Ferry-boat crossed the River Clyde every hour and it was a very dangerous conveyance. It was held in control by one man dressed in a military cloak. He was called the Pilot and did nothing but shout and yell in a very hoarse voice. Both ends of the boat were open and the water often washed the deck. It was dangerous to stand at either end and so the passengers had to sit closely huddled together in the centre of the boat. I even doubt if there were any seats. On stormy days the boat tossed and rocked so badly and the River Clyde was always so unruly that one did not dare venture to travel. Glasgow fogs contribute a great deal to the discomfort of travelling, and so there were very few passengers who would take a chance of crossing.

Our boat tossed and moaned and the wind was so strong that it tore the elastic off my new sailor hat. My hat flew off and I loaded down the river. My eyes filled with tears. "Don't worry, I'll buy you another one like it as soon as we get to the other side." I was comforted, but she never replaced my hat and all day long I travelled without a cha-peau. My head was chilled, but all I thought of was Home Sweet Home.

The journey seemed so long. I was getting nervous and asked the young lady many times as to just when we would get home, but she assured me that we were in no danger and that I must not worry or annoy her. "I'll only stay five minutes with my Aunt and you'll be home in time for your lunch" I took her at her word and was pacified for a while. At last the dizzy voyage was over. I can still hear the shouting "Ho Ho" and can smell the sea green sickening water. I must have been very seasick for I was beset with a fit of vomiting that quite alarmed the lady. She bought me a bag of sweets which I refused to even look at.

The walk to her Aunt's house took an hour. We waded up hill and down hill across wobbly cobble stones covered with moss. My feet were so tired; I could hardly keep pace and I was practically dragged along. At last we reached the Aunt's house and I was immediately attracted by a beautiful green Parrot who talked like a human being. I played with it while the two women chattered away like a pair of magpies. Evidently they had a lot to say for the conversation did not seem to end, and the chatter, chatter irritated me so much that I had another fit of vomiting.

The Aunt said I must be hungry and lead me into the dining room, but I refused to touch a morsel. Father had instilled in me the fear of accepting food in someone else's house, unless of course he was there or someone of the family gave us permission to accept. It was considered bad form to eat in a strange home and Father and Mother always insisted that regular meals should be eaten at home and children must not come hungry on a visit. Scotch people have the habit of showing a mark of affection to a child by giving it money—a sixpence or a shilling or often a sovereign. It was considered a crime to accept any gift and we always respected our Parents' wishes in that direction.

The Aunt begged me to eat and offered me tempting dishes, but I was firm and explained I wasn't hungry. It hurt them very much to have to sit down and eat lunch while I played with the Parrot and was surely starved. This was real martyrdom and I deserved a great deal of credit. I doubt if a modern child would endure so much.

"When are we going home?" I pleaded, "If you will be a good little girl and eat something, we will take you home". No I couldn't eat a thing I assured them smiling and thanked them again for their hospitality. I went back to the bird and waited and the tears flowed down my cheeks.

The Aunt looked at her watch and announced that it was five o'clock and as I had not eaten a thing all day, I ought to be taken home. The young lady agreed and we started homeward bound. On our way to the boat, my friend spied a ribbon counter and spent a long time trying to match a piece at all. She solemnly some tales about bad men and ghosts to frighten the mothers and children. When Father came home, he found mother frantic. He quickly ran to Police-Headquarters and reported his loss. The policemen in our district were questioned and one man thought he saw a little girl answering my description. He said he saw me going towards the ferry and I was lead by a woman. I can picture his fear. I surely was kidnapped and an alarm was sent out. It is too bad that the telephone was not in vogue then; it might have saved many a trying situation.

It was ten o'clock when I reached my doorstep. The young lady realized it was late and just rang the door-bell and I ran up. I can see my Father's pale face as he took me on his lap while mother sobbed and uttered a prayer of thanks that I was home safe and sound. My one thought immediately was to eat so much I immediately sat at the table and so I could not be questioned.

I remember in later months the Aunt and young lady called to see us and Mother accepted them very coolly. They lauded my virtues and said they had never seen a child so firm about refusing to eat. Mother was proud of this. I'm sure
