One Spider In Canada Is Dangerous

OTTAWA (CP)—The spider's enemy is really other insects. Few spiders can bite humans but their webs dispose of hundreds of bothersome insects.

Nevertheless, Canada has one dangerous spider, says the federal agriculture department. A species of black widow spider lives in southern British Columbia, southwestern Saskatchewan and Ontario.

The female has a glossy, black body about a quarter of an inch across, marked underneath with an hourglass shape in yellow or red. She rarely attacks unless her eggs or web are disturbed.

About one person in 20 dies after a bite by the black widow and the pain can be intense, rising to a peak in two or three hours and fading away in two days or so.

A doctor should be called to a bitten person; ice kept on the bite, and lots of weak, sweet tea, drunk. Alcohol, however, makes the poison more deadly.

The best way to keep spiders of any sort out of buildings is to screen windows and doors carefully and then to clean the inside of the building thoroughly with a stiff broom, says the department.

The best insecticide is a mixture of one-per-cent lindane, two-per-cent chlordane and one-half-per-cent dieldrin. The dust of this solution can be applied to spider webs and crawl spaces under buildings.
