

CHURCHES TOMORROW

CHURCH of ENGLAND

S. PETER'S CATHEDRAL Anglican Rochford Square. The Reverend Canon E. M. Malone M.A., D.D., Incumbent. Miss Susanne Brenton, Lic. Music Organist and Choir Director

S. PAUL'S ANGLICAN CHURCH THE PARISH CHURCH Established 1769 by Royal Foundation. The Reverend J. T. Ibbott, Rector Mr. Royston F. Mugford, A.R.C.O. Organist and Choir Master.

PRESBYTERIAN THE KIRK OF S. JAMES

The Reverend T. H. B. Somers, M.A., S.T.M., Minister. Miss E. Lillian McKenzie, Mur. Sac. Organist and Director of the Choirs

ZION PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH Prince and Grafton Streets Reverend G. Carlyle Webster, Minister Organist and Choir Director Mr. Frank Johnston, A.T.C.L.

MORNING WORSHIP

11.00 a.m. Sermon: "The Need of Faith."—Mr. Thomas D. DeBlols. Hymns 46, 231, 374. Solo: Miss Christine King, Selected. Anthem: "Let the Mountains Shout for Joy." Stevens. 7.30 p.m. The Church School. All members are urged to be present.

GOSPEL HALL Upper Prince Street

Order of Meetings for Lord's Day 10 A.M.—Sunday School 11 A.M.—Breaking of Bread 7.30 P.M.—Gospel Meeting Settling forth man's total depravity and salvation through the redemption which is in Christ Jesus. All welcome, no collections.

TRINITY UNITED CHURCH

Ministers: Reverend H. E. D. Ashford Reverend J. T. Irwin Choirmaster and Organist: Raymond Player, M.A., Mus. Bac. 11.00 a.m. Communion, Reception of new members. Sermon: "Behold the Man"—Mr. Irwin. Trio: "Let All Mortal Flesh" (arr. R. Player), K. McEachern, G. Johnson, W. Rogers. 7.00 p.m. Sermon: "The Commandment Everybody Amends"—Mr. Ashford. Anthem: "Turn Thy Face" (Attwood).

THE BAPTIST CHURCH

Corner Prince and Fitzroy Streets The Reverend James D. Davison, B.A., B.D., Pastor. Organist: Mrs. G. Elliott Full 11.00 a.m. Worship, introducing a new sermon series "Plumbing The Depths." (1) "How Does One Get Religion?" Anthem: "Like as the Hart" —Novello. 12 noon: Church School. 7.00 p.m. Worship Sermon, "What's The Good Word?" Anthem: "Still, Still With Thee"—Oley Speaks.

CENTRAL CHRISTIAN CHURCH

219 Kent Street. Marvel D. Dunbar, B.Th., Minister. Miss Thelma Burns, Organist and Choir Director. 10.00 a.m. Church School and Family Hour. We are anxious that you take advantage of this hour of study.

United PENTECOSTAL CHURCH 37 Elm Avenue Rev. Quincy Stairs, Pastor. Phone 2790-L SERVICES 10 a.m.—Sunday School 11 a.m.—Worship and Praise 2 p.m.—Children's Church 8.30 p.m.—Prayer 7 p.m.—Evangelistic Meeting. EVERYBODY WELCOME "The Church That's Different"

The Salvation Army

"HOME OF EVANGELISM" Great George Street Sr. Capt. and Mrs. Les Ticombe Corps Officers. Saturday 8.00 p.m. Prayer and Praise meeting Sunday 11.00 a.m. Holiness Meeting conducted by Sr. Major H. Wheeler and Major H. Stevens. 7.00 p.m. Salvation Meeting. Sunday Youth Meetings 2.00 p.m. Directory Meeting 2.30 p.m. Sunday School 6.00 p.m. Y.P. Salvation meeting. "Thy touch hath still its ancient power"

THE CENTRAL GUARDIAN

This column is reserved for news of local interest, but advertising of a newsy nature may be inserted at five cents a word, strictly payable in advance. COOK'S STUDIO for perfect pictures. C. I. L. PAINT HEADQUARTERS. Bryenton & MacKay Co. REFRIGERATORS, Ranges, Motors and Washer repairs, Storey Electric. Phone 3007. DOUGHNUTS, light, fluffy, freshly made daily at Stewart Bakeries. SEE LEPAGES advance shipment of new spring styles. Kent Street Store. Phone 116. ATTENTION SCOTSMEN (AND OTHERS)—20% discount on Tailored-to-measure clothes. J. P. MacPherson & Son.

CHRISTIAN BAPTIST.—New Glasgow Church, January 20th. Services at New Glasgow 11.00 A.M. Breadalbane at 3.00 P.M. Fredericton 7.30 P.M. Minister, Rev. M. Waterworth. YOU'LL LOVE STEWART'S Flaky pies in choice of Lemon, Coconut, Cream, Raisin, Apple, Cherry. WHITE ELEPHANT SALE—On Wednesday evening, the English Group of the Junior W.A. of Trinity United Church were hostesses at a White Elephant Sale at the home of Mrs. E.M. Fould.

MURRAY HARBOUR PASTORAL CHARGE.—United Church of Canada. Services Sunday, January 20th. 11 A.M. Murray Harbour. 3.00 P.M. Little Sands. 7.00 P.M. Murray River. Rev. D. Wallace MacPherson, Minister. MILTON-RUSTICO PARISH.—Reverend A. E. Piercey, R. D. Services for Sunday, January 20th, are as follows:—St. John's, Milton. 11.00 Morning Prayer and Sermon. St. Mark's, Rustico. 2.30 Evening Prayer and Sermon. "Come and bring the whole family."

MR. PEPPIN GUEST SPEAKER—On Wednesday, Mr. S.G. Peppin, of the staff of the P.E.I. Potato Marketing Board, was guest speaker at the annual convention of the Ontario Fruit and Vegetable Growers' Association held in Toronto. Mrs. Peppin accompanied her husband to Toronto from where they will proceed to Florida, where Mr. Peppin will check and supervise the disease readings on the plots of Island seed which are under test at the present time. Later he will visit several other Southern states to ascertain the possibilities of further developing the markets for Island seed.

FUNERAL THURSDAY—The funeral of B. J. MacDonald, of The Well Cove, aged 83 years, was held from his late residence on Thursday, Jan. 17 to St. Joachim's Church, Vernon River for Requiem Mass at 9.30. Mass was sung by Rev. Charles MacCarthy, Iona, assisted by Rev. Urbin Gillis and Rev. Phalen MacKenna, who also officiated at the grave. Pall bearers were William Morrissey, John Naddy, John Gill, John McRae, Charles MacDonald and George MacDonald. Burial in the church cemetery.

PERSONALS Billy Acorn, Village Green, was a recent visitor to Charlottetown. Dr. and Mrs. J.A. Carruthers are entertaining friends at bridge this evening. Mr. D.M. McGuire left on Tuesday morning on a short business trip to Halifax. Mrs. Randolph Stevenson, Hunter River, is a patient in the P. E. Island Hospital. Mr. George E. Ives, City, and Mr. Douglas J. MacNutt, of Kensington, left on Thursday on a business trip to Waterloo, Iowa.

IN MEMORIAM In loving memory of our Grandfather S. L. Boswall who died January 20th, 1951. Fond are the memories that linger, Dear is the one that is gone, In memory we hold you dear Granddaddy, As long as the years roll along. Ever Remembered by Grandchildren Eida, Elaine and David.

The British and Foreign Bible Society Strives to keep before everyone the inestimable value of the word of God and to place a copy of this in the hands of all. The business man stresses the vast resources of the country, the politician guards the liberty of the individual, the educationalist emphasizes the value of learning, the medical man protects the health of the community. Quietly and consistently the Bible Society reminds men that in a final analysis it is righteousness that exalteth a nation and it is Truth that makes free men. Help the great cause of the Bible Society by a contribution, life membership or bequest through the Prince Edward Island Auxiliary with its Bible House at 100 Fitzroy Street, Charlottetown.

TOWN TAXI—Phone 1600-322 RAYNOE'S HAPPY VALLEY EGGS.—They're fortified. MRS. JOHNSTON'S LADIES' WEAR, January Sales. NOTHING AS GOOD as Stewart's Home Made Fresh Breads. Try some today. SPECIAL "Small Sizes" Rack at LePages Bargain Basement, Kent Street. Call today. RANGE AND OIL BURNERS serviced by Vickerson Engineering Co. Telephone 2480. SPECIALS.—For the remainder of January, Machine Permanents $3.00 up. Coleen Beauty Shoppe over White's Restaurant. Phone 1091. YORK UNITED CHURCH.—York 11 A. M. Brackley 3 P. M. Central 7.30 P.M. Rev. John Douglas. FLIGHTS DAILY except Sunday to New Glasgow and Halifax. Phone Maritime Central Airways 2061 or 504. HUNTER RIVER CHARGE.—Services for January 20th. Wiltshire 11. Wheatley River 3. Hunter River 7.30. Sermon "Limiting God." Rev. Howard Christie, Minister. Wheatley River Annual Meeting Monday, 2 o'clock. SATURDAY SPECIAL at Stewart Bakeries, thickly frosted, butter rich Molasses Cakes, a family favorite. MacDONALD RADIO SERVICE 180 Kent Street. Radio repairs, sound equipment. Disc Recording. Rogers Majestic and Stewart Warner Radios. TRYON—BONSHAW GROUP OF UNITED BAPTIST CHURCHES.—Church Service Notices for Sunday, January 20th, 1952, the services of the above indicated group of United Baptist Churches will be as follows:—Westmoreland, Public Worship 11.00 A.M. Tryon, Sunday School, 2.00 P.M. Public Worship 3.00 P.M. Bonshaw Public Worship 7.30 P.M. Subject, "The Mind of Christ". Text. Phil. 2:5-8. Rev. W. G. Killam.

Our Daily Serial Continued from page 2 that was the mate to her own. She was smoking an old corncob pipe, and for a full moment she studied Celia before she spoke. Her voice was low-pitched with an almost liquid note. "You don't know what's de matter wid yo' mammy, does you?" Celia asked quickly. "What do you mean?" Ruby Pearle nodded. "I knowed you didn't," she said quietly. "Dat's how come I asked you to come in here so's I could tell dat yo' mammy ain't to be wearied with nothing. Does you hear me? Nothing!" The last word came so sharply and with a tone of such authority, that Celia bristled indignantly. "I haven't the least idea what you're talking about—" "I going to tell you" Ruby Pearle interrupted her calmly. I don't want no mo' company here lessen it's going to be somebody what can make yo' mammy laugh and be happy again, spite o' de pain." Celia shivered as though a cold wind had blown over her. Her hands clenched in her lap and she waited, frightened by the old woman's tone and manner. "Yo' pappy know what all her," Ruby Pearle went on after a little. "but yo' mammy don't know yo' pappy know. And she ain't to know dat he knows — you hear me?" "Of course I hear you, Ruby Pearle—" "Den you listen close," said Ruby Pearle sternly. "You think hit's funny 'case yo' mammy can't sleep nights an' yo' pappy git up and go out out de do' wid her and play wid her like she was a li' child. Hit ain't funny yo' mammy a mighty sick child. Yo' pappy make like to her he est think she can't sleep on account o' mebbe she's nervous like. Hit ain't that. The doctor done tole me so's mebbe I can help her. Dat how come I makes trouble when I think folkses comin' here goin' to weary her."

"But, Ruby Pearle, I don't understand!" Celia protested. "No'm I knows you don't," said Ruby Pearle. "Dat's how come I goin' to tell you. When de li'l Susan was borned, yo' mammy powerful sick. De doctor tell yo' pappy she ain't got long to live. He ain't tell Miss Ma' Sue—but Miss Ma' Sue, she know! Like folks know things—but she don't want yo' pappy to know. She make like she feel fine. De doctor warn yo' pappy to pretend like he thinks she feels fine too, but me and him we takes care o' her. We don't let her do nothing to get tired; we don't let her weary about anything but we got to do it so's she don't know how comes we do it. Yo' pappy a fine man, Miss Celia. He plum crazy 'bout yo' mammy. He let people think hit's funny 'case he get up in de middle o' de night and work in de garden and paint chicken houses and stuff like dat. Hit's so he can be wid yo' mammy when she's having one of dem bad times."

To be continued KING COLE TEA

Literature And Life

By BOOKMAN OFF GUARD It is quite impossible for us to be on guard all the time; by that I mean that we should do everything after looking at it from all angles. Habit takes care of that, and we form habits good and bad. There is such a thing as custom, which Lord Bacon said was "the chief magistrate of man's life." Being off guard in some ways has its advantage, for then we are not posing but are natural. The hypocrites of our Lord's day, whose conduct He so condemned, were play-actors, being scrupulously careful about certain things, but they "strained at gnats and swallowed camels." Little things reveal character. I am sure that we all admit that W. E. Gladstone was a great British statesman—one of Britain's greatest sons. He was outstanding as a speaker in the House of Commons, but his character is seen in those little things—"those little unremembered acts of kindness and of love." We are told that he was in the habit of buying a paper from a newsboy at a certain street corner, but missed him one day, and for several days. Upon enquiry, he found that he was in the hospital. He went to see him, sat by his bed, read the Bible to him and had prayer. That was like a little window which showed the way into the heart of Mr. Gladstone. And years ago we read how, after a busy day in the House of Commons, he would go home and get down on the floor and play with his granddaughter. He could enter into a child's world and kept through all the years a child heart. This did not interfere with his work in behalf of the nation, nor did it disqualify him from writing on the defence of Christianity. All will agree that Jonathan Edwards was a great man. His seventy "resolutions," by which he planned his life show that; but little things show how human he too was. His references in some letters to "blooming flowers in the spring" indicated that his head was not always in the clouds, and his great work on the "Freedom of the Will" did not dry up the fountain of tears. This extract from a speaker in the House of Commons, but his character is seen in those little things—"those little unremembered acts of kindness and of love." We are told that he was in the habit of buying a paper from a newsboy at a certain street corner, but missed him one day, and for several days. Upon enquiry, he found that he was in the hospital. He went to see him, sat by his bed, read the Bible to him and had prayer. That was like a little window which showed the way into the heart of Mr. Gladstone. And years ago we read how, after a busy day in the House of Commons, he would go home and get down on the floor and play with his granddaughter. He could enter into a child's world and kept through all the years a child heart. This did not interfere with his work in behalf of the nation, nor did it disqualify him from writing on the defence of Christianity. All will agree that Jonathan Edwards was a great man. His seventy "resolutions," by which he planned his life show that; but little things show how human he too was. His references in some letters to "blooming flowers in the spring" indicated that his head was not always in the clouds, and his great work on the "Freedom of the Will" did not dry up the fountain of tears. This extract from a speaker in the House of Commons, but his character is seen in those little things—"those little unremembered acts of kindness and of love." We are told that he was in the habit of buying a paper from a newsboy at a certain street corner, but missed him one day, and for several days. Upon enquiry, he found that he was in the hospital. He went to see him, sat by his bed, read the Bible to him and had prayer. That was like a little window which showed the way into the heart of Mr. Gladstone. And years ago we read how, after a busy day in the House of Commons, he would go home and get down on the floor and play with his granddaughter. He could enter into a child's world and kept through all the years a child heart. This did not interfere with his work in behalf of the nation, nor did it disqualify him from writing on the defence of Christianity. All will agree that Jonathan Edwards was a great man. His seventy "resolutions," by which he planned his life show that; but little things show how human he too was. His references in some letters to "blooming flowers in the spring" indicated that his head was not always in the clouds, and his great work on the "Freedom of the Will" did not dry up the fountain of tears. This extract from a speaker in the House of Commons, but his character is seen in those little things—"those little unremembered acts of kindness and of love." We are told that he was in the habit of buying a paper from a newsboy at a certain street corner, but missed him one day, and for several days. Upon enquiry, he found that he was in the hospital. He went to see him, sat by his bed, read the Bible to him and had prayer. That was like a little window which showed the way into the heart of Mr. Gladstone. And years ago we read how, after a busy day in the House of Commons, he would go home and get down on the floor and play with his granddaughter. He could enter into a child's world and kept through all the years a child heart. This did not interfere with his work in behalf of the nation, nor did it disqualify him from writing on the defence of Christianity. All will agree that Jonathan Edwards was a great man. His seventy "resolutions," by which he planned his life show that; but little things show how human he too was. His references in some letters to "blooming flowers in the spring" indicated that his head was not always in the clouds, and his great work on the "Freedom of the Will" did not dry up the fountain of tears. This extract from a speaker in the House of Commons, but his character is seen in those little things—"those little unremembered acts of kindness and of love." We are told that he was in the habit of buying a paper from a newsboy at a certain street corner, but missed him one day, and for several days. Upon enquiry, he found that he was in the hospital. He went to see him, sat by his bed, read the Bible to him and had prayer. That was like a little window which showed the way into the heart of Mr. Gladstone. And years ago we read how, after a busy day in the House of Commons, he would go home and get down on the floor and play with his granddaughter. He could enter into a child's world and kept through all the years a child heart. This did not interfere with his work in behalf of the nation, nor did it disqualify him from writing on the defence of Christianity. All will agree that Jonathan Edwards was a great man. His seventy "resolutions," by which he planned his life show that; but little things show how human he too was. His references in some letters to "blooming flowers in the spring" indicated that his head was not always in the clouds, and his great work on the "Freedom of the Will" did not dry up the fountain of tears. This extract from a speaker in the House of Commons, but his character is seen in those little things—"those little unremembered acts of kindness and of love." We are told that he was in the habit of buying a paper from a newsboy at a certain street corner, but missed him one day, and for several days. Upon enquiry, he found that he was in the hospital. He went to see him, sat by his bed, read the Bible to him and had prayer. That was like a little window which showed the way into the heart of Mr. Gladstone. And years ago we read how, after a busy day in the House of Commons, he would go home and get down on the floor and play with his granddaughter. He could enter into a child's world and kept through all the years a child heart. This did not interfere with his work in behalf of the nation, nor did it disqualify him from writing on the defence of Christianity. All will agree that Jonathan Edwards was a great man. His seventy "resolutions," by which he planned his life show that; but little things show how human he too was. His references in some letters to "blooming flowers in the spring" indicated that his head was not always in the clouds, and his great work on the "Freedom of the Will" did not dry up the fountain of tears. This extract from a speaker in the House of Commons, but his character is seen in those little things—"those little unremembered acts of kindness and of love." We are told that he was in the habit of buying a paper from a newsboy at a certain street corner, but missed him one day, and for several days. Upon enquiry, he found that he was in the hospital. He went to see him, sat by his bed, read the Bible to him and had prayer. That was like a little window which showed the way into the heart of Mr. Gladstone. And years ago we read how, after a busy day in the House of Commons, he would go home and get down on the floor and play with his granddaughter. He could enter into a child's world and kept through all the years a child heart. This did not interfere with his work in behalf of the nation, nor did it disqualify him from writing on the defence of Christianity. All will agree that Jonathan Edwards was a great man. His seventy "resolutions," by which he planned his life show that; but little things show how human he too was. His references in some letters to "blooming flowers in the spring" indicated that his head was not always in the clouds, and his great work on the "Freedom of the Will" did not dry up the fountain of tears. This extract from a speaker in the House of Commons, but his character is seen in those little things—"those little unremembered acts of kindness and of love." We are told that he was in the habit of buying a paper from a newsboy at a certain street corner, but missed him one day, and for several days. Upon enquiry, he found that he was in the hospital. He went to see him, sat by his bed, read the Bible to him and had prayer. That was like a little window which showed the way into the heart of Mr. Gladstone. And years ago we read how, after a busy day in the House of Commons, he would go home and get down on the floor and play with his granddaughter. He could enter into a child's world and kept through all the years a child heart. This did not interfere with his work in behalf of the nation, nor did it disqualify him from writing on the defence of Christianity. All will agree that Jonathan Edwards was a great man. His seventy "resolutions," by which he planned his life show that; but little things show how human he too was. His references in some letters to "blooming flowers in the spring" indicated that his head was not always in the clouds, and his great work on the "Freedom of the Will" did not dry up the fountain of tears. This extract from a speaker in the House of Commons, but his character is seen in those little things—"those little unremembered acts of kindness and of love." We are told that he was in the habit of buying a paper from a newsboy at a certain street corner, but missed him one day, and for several days. Upon enquiry, he found that he was in the hospital. He went to see him, sat by his bed, read the Bible to him and had prayer. That was like a little window which showed the way into the heart of Mr. Gladstone. And years ago we read how, after a busy day in the House of Commons, he would go home and get down on the floor and play with his granddaughter. He could enter into a child's world and kept through all the years a child heart. This did not interfere with his work in behalf of the nation, nor did it disqualify him from writing on the defence of Christianity. All will agree that Jonathan Edwards was a great man. His seventy "resolutions," by which he planned his life show that; but little things show how human he too was. His references in some letters to "blooming flowers in the spring" indicated that his head was not always in the clouds, and his great work on the "Freedom of the Will" did not dry up the fountain of tears. This extract from a speaker in the House of Commons, but his character is seen in those little things—"those little unremembered acts of kindness and of love." We are told that he was in the habit of buying a paper from a newsboy at a certain street corner, but missed him one day, and for several days. Upon enquiry, he found that he was in the hospital. He went to see him, sat by his bed, read the Bible to him and had prayer. That was like a little window which showed the way into the heart of Mr. Gladstone. And years ago we read how, after a busy day in the House of Commons, he would go home and get down on the floor and play with his granddaughter. He could enter into a child's world and kept through all the years a child heart. This did not interfere with his work in behalf of the nation, nor did it disqualify him from writing on the defence of Christianity. All will agree that Jonathan Edwards was a great man. His seventy "resolutions," by which he planned his life show that; but little things show how human he too was. His references in some letters to "blooming flowers in the spring" indicated that his head was not always in the clouds, and his great work on the "Freedom of the Will" did not dry up the fountain of tears. This extract from a speaker in the House of Commons, but his character is seen in those little things—"those little unremembered acts of kindness and of love." We are told that he was in the habit of buying a paper from a newsboy at a certain street corner, but missed him one day, and for several days. Upon enquiry, he found that he was in the hospital. He went to see him, sat by his bed, read the Bible to him and had prayer. That was like a little window which showed the way into the heart of Mr. Gladstone. And years ago we read how, after a busy day in the House of Commons, he would go home and get down on the floor and play with his granddaughter. He could enter into a child's world and kept through all the years a child heart. This did not interfere with his work in behalf of the nation, nor did it disqualify him from writing on the defence of Christianity. All will agree that Jonathan Edwards was a great man. His seventy "resolutions," by which he planned his life show that; but little things show how human he too was. His references in some letters to "blooming flowers in the spring" indicated that his head was not always in the clouds, and his great work on the "Freedom of the Will" did not dry up the fountain of tears. This extract from a speaker in the House of Commons, but his character is seen in those little things—"those little unremembered acts of kindness and of love." We are told that he was in the habit of buying a paper from a newsboy at a certain street corner, but missed him one day, and for several days. Upon enquiry, he found that he was in the hospital. He went to see him, sat by his bed, read the Bible to him and had prayer. That was like a little window which showed the way into the heart of Mr. Gladstone. And years ago we read how, after a busy day in the House of Commons, he would go home and get down on the floor and play with his granddaughter. He could enter into a child's world and kept through all the years a child heart. This did not interfere with his work in behalf of the nation, nor did it disqualify him from writing on the defence of Christianity. All will agree that Jonathan Edwards was a great man. His seventy "resolutions," by which he planned his life show that; but little things show how human he too was. His references in some letters to "blooming flowers in the spring" indicated that his head was not always in the clouds, and his great work on the "Freedom of the Will" did not dry up the fountain of tears. This extract from a speaker in the House of Commons, but his character is seen in those little things—"those little unremembered acts of kindness and of love." We are told that he was in the habit of buying a paper from a newsboy at a certain street corner, but missed him one day, and for several days. Upon enquiry, he found that he was in the hospital. He went to see him, sat by his bed, read the Bible to him and had prayer. That was like a little window which showed the way into the heart of Mr. Gladstone. And years ago we read how, after a busy day in the House of Commons, he would go home and get down on the floor and play with his granddaughter. He could enter into a child's world and kept through all the years a child heart. This did not interfere with his work in behalf of the nation, nor did it disqualify him from writing on the defence of Christianity. All will agree that Jonathan Edwards was a great man. His seventy "resolutions," by which he planned his life show that; but little things show how human he too was. His references in some letters to "blooming flowers in the spring" indicated that his head was not always in the clouds, and his great work on the "Freedom of the Will" did not dry up the fountain of tears. This extract from a speaker in the House of Commons, but his character is seen in those little things—"those little unremembered acts of kindness and of love." We are told that he was in the habit of buying a paper from a newsboy at a certain street corner, but missed him one day, and for several days. Upon enquiry, he found that he was in the hospital. He went to see him, sat by his bed, read the Bible to him and had prayer. That was like a little window which showed the way into the heart of Mr. Gladstone. And years ago we read how, after a busy day in the House of Commons, he would go home and get down on the floor and play with his granddaughter. He could enter into a child's world and kept through all the years a child heart. This did not interfere with his work in behalf of the nation, nor did it disqualify him from writing on the defence of Christianity. All will agree that Jonathan Edwards was a great man. His seventy "resolutions," by which he planned his life show that; but little things show how human he too was. His references in some letters to "blooming flowers in the spring" indicated that his head was not always in the clouds, and his great work on the "Freedom of the Will" did not dry up the fountain of tears. This extract from a speaker in the House of Commons, but his character is seen in those little things—"those little unremembered acts of kindness and of love." We are told that he was in the habit of buying a paper from a newsboy at a certain street corner, but missed him one day, and for several days. Upon enquiry, he found that he was in the hospital. He went to see him, sat by his bed, read the Bible to him and had prayer. That was like a little window which showed the way into the heart of Mr. Gladstone. And years ago we read how, after a busy day in the House of Commons, he would go home and get down on the floor and play with his granddaughter. He could enter into a child's world and kept through all the years a child heart. This did not interfere with his work in behalf of the nation, nor did it disqualify him from writing on the defence of Christianity. All will agree that Jonathan Edwards was a great man. His seventy "resolutions," by which he planned his life show that; but little things show how human he too was. His references in some letters to "blooming flowers in the spring" indicated that his head was not always in the clouds, and his great work on the "Freedom of the Will" did not dry up the fountain of tears. This extract from a speaker in the House of Commons, but his character is seen in those little things—"those little unremembered acts of kindness and of love." We are told that he was in the habit of buying a paper from a newsboy at a certain street corner, but missed him one day, and for several days. Upon enquiry, he found that he was in the hospital. He went to see him, sat by his bed, read the Bible to him and had prayer. That was like a little window which showed the way into the heart of Mr. Gladstone. And years ago we read how, after a busy day in the House of Commons, he would go home and get down on the floor and play with his granddaughter. He could enter into a child's world and kept through all the years a child heart. This did not interfere with his work in behalf of the nation, nor did it disqualify him from writing on the defence of Christianity. All will agree that Jonathan Edwards was a great man. His seventy "resolutions," by which he planned his life show that; but little things show how human he too was. His references in some letters to "blooming flowers in the spring" indicated that his head was not always in the clouds, and his great work on the "Freedom of the Will" did not dry up the fountain of tears. This extract from a speaker in the House of Commons, but his character is seen in those little things—"those little unremembered acts of kindness and of love." We are told that he was in the habit of buying a paper from a newsboy at a certain street corner, but missed him one day, and for several days. Upon enquiry, he found that he was in the hospital. He went to see him, sat by his bed, read the Bible to him and had prayer. That was like a little window which showed the way into the heart of Mr. Gladstone. And years ago we read how, after a busy day in the House of Commons, he would go home and get down on the floor and play with his granddaughter. He could enter into a child's world and kept through all the years a child heart. This did not interfere with his work in behalf of the nation, nor did it disqualify him from writing on the defence of Christianity. All will agree that Jonathan Edwards was a great man. His seventy "resolutions," by which he planned his life show that; but little things show how human he too was. His references in some letters to "blooming flowers in the spring" indicated that his head was not always in the clouds, and his great work on the "Freedom of the Will" did not dry up the fountain of tears. This extract from a speaker in the House of Commons, but his character is seen in those little things—"those little unremembered acts of kindness and of love." We are told that he was in the habit of buying a paper from a newsboy at a certain street corner, but missed him one day, and for several days. Upon enquiry, he found that he was in the hospital. He went to see him, sat by his bed, read the Bible to him and had prayer. That was like a little window which showed the way into the heart of Mr. Gladstone. And years ago we read how, after a busy day in the House of Commons, he would go home and get down on the floor and play with his granddaughter. He could enter into a child's world and kept through all the years a child heart. This did not interfere with his work in behalf of the nation, nor did it disqualify him from writing on the defence of Christianity. All will agree that Jonathan Edwards was a great man. His seventy "resolutions," by which he planned his life show that; but little things show how human he too was. His references in some letters to "blooming flowers in the spring" indicated that his head was not always in the clouds, and his great work on the "Freedom of the Will" did not dry up the fountain of tears. This extract from a speaker in the House of Commons, but his character is seen in those little things—"those little unremembered acts of kindness and of love." We are told that he was in the habit of buying a paper from a newsboy at a certain street corner, but missed him one day, and for several days. Upon enquiry, he found that he was in the hospital. He went to see him, sat by his bed, read the Bible to him and had prayer. That was like a little window which showed the way into the heart of Mr. Gladstone. And years ago we read how, after a busy day in the House of Commons, he would go home and get down on the floor and play with his granddaughter. He could enter into a child's world and kept through all the years a child heart. This did not interfere with his work in behalf of the nation, nor did it disqualify him from writing on the defence of Christianity. All will agree that Jonathan Edwards was a great man. His seventy "resolutions," by which he planned his life show that; but little things show how human he too was. His references in some letters to "blooming flowers in the spring" indicated that his head was not always in the clouds, and his great work on the "Freedom of the Will" did not dry up the fountain of tears. This extract from a speaker in the House of Commons, but his character is seen in those little things—"those little unremembered acts of kindness and of love." We are told that he was in the habit of buying a paper from a newsboy at a certain street corner, but missed him one day, and for several days. Upon enquiry, he found that he was in the hospital. He went to see him, sat by his bed, read the Bible to him and had prayer. That was like a little window which showed the way into the heart of Mr. Gladstone. And years ago we read how, after a busy day in the House of Commons, he would go home and get down on the floor and play with his granddaughter. He could enter into a child's world and kept through all the years a child heart. This did not interfere with his work in behalf of the nation, nor did it disqualify him from writing on the defence of Christianity. All will agree that Jonathan Edwards was a great man. His seventy "resolutions," by which he planned his life show that; but little things show how human he too was. His references in some letters to "blooming flowers in the spring" indicated that his head was not always in the clouds, and his great work on the "Freedom of the Will" did not dry up the fountain of tears. This extract from a speaker in the House of Commons, but his character is seen in those little things—"those little unremembered acts of kindness and of love." We are told that he was in the habit of buying a paper from a newsboy at a certain street corner, but missed him one day, and for several days. Upon enquiry, he found that he was in the hospital. He went to see him, sat by his bed, read the Bible to him and had prayer. That was like a little window which showed the way into the heart of Mr. Gladstone. And years ago we read how, after a busy day in the House of Commons, he would go home and get down on the floor and play with his granddaughter. He could enter into a child's world and kept through all the years a child heart. This did not interfere with his work in behalf of the nation, nor did it disqualify him from writing on the defence of Christianity. All will agree that Jonathan Edwards was a great man. His seventy "resolutions," by which he planned his life show that; but little things show how human he too was. His references in some letters to "blooming flowers in the spring" indicated that his head was not always in the clouds, and his great work on the "Freedom of the Will" did not dry up the fountain of tears. This extract from a speaker in the House of Commons, but his character is seen in those little things—"those little unremembered acts of kindness and of love." We are told that he was in the habit of buying a paper from a newsboy at a certain street corner, but missed him one day, and for several days. Upon enquiry, he found that he was in the hospital. He went to see him, sat by his bed, read the Bible to him and had prayer. That was like a little window which showed the way into the heart of Mr. Gladstone. And years ago we read how, after a busy day in the House of Commons, he would go home and get down on the floor and play with his granddaughter. He could enter into a child's world and kept through all the years a child heart. This did not interfere with his work in behalf of the nation, nor did it disqualify him from writing on the defence of Christianity. All will agree that Jonathan Edwards was a great man. His seventy "resolutions," by which he planned his life show that; but little things show how human he too was. His references in some letters to "blooming flowers in the spring" indicated that his head was not always in the clouds, and his great work on the "Freedom of the Will" did not dry up the fountain of tears. This extract from a speaker in the House of Commons, but his character is seen in those little things—"those little unremembered acts of kindness and of love." We are told that he was in the habit of buying a paper from a newsboy at a certain street corner, but missed him one day, and for several days. Upon enquiry, he found that he was in the hospital. He went to see him, sat by his bed, read the Bible to him and had prayer. That was like a little window which showed the way into the heart of Mr. Gladstone. And years ago we read how, after a busy day in the House of Commons, he would go home and get down on the floor and play with his granddaughter. He could enter into a child's world and kept through all the years a child heart. This did not interfere with his work in behalf of the nation, nor did it disqualify him from writing on the defence of Christianity. All will agree that Jonathan Edwards was a great man. His seventy "resolutions," by which he planned his life show that; but little things show how human he too was. His references in some letters to "blooming flowers in the spring" indicated that his head was not always in the clouds, and his great work on the "Freedom of the Will" did not dry up the fountain of tears. This extract from a speaker in the House of Commons, but his character is seen in those little things—"those little unremembered acts of kindness and of love." We are told that he was in the habit of buying a paper from a newsboy at a certain street corner, but missed him one day, and for several days. Upon enquiry, he found that he was in the hospital. He went to see him, sat by his bed, read the Bible to him and had prayer. That was like a little window which showed the way into the heart of Mr. Gladstone. And years ago we read how, after a busy day in the House of Commons, he would go home and get down on the floor and play with his granddaughter. He could enter into a child's world and kept through all the years a child heart. This did not interfere with his work in behalf of the nation, nor did it disqualify him from writing on the defence of Christianity. All will agree that Jonathan Edwards was a great man. His seventy "resolutions," by which he planned his life show that; but little things show how human he too was. His references in some letters to "blooming flowers in the spring" indicated that his head was not always in the clouds, and his great work on the "Freedom of the Will" did not dry up the fountain of tears. This extract from a speaker in the House of Commons, but his character is seen in those little things—"those little unremembered acts of kindness and of love." We are told that he was in the habit of buying a paper from a newsboy at a certain street corner, but missed him one day, and for several days. Upon enquiry, he found that he was in the hospital. He went to see him, sat by his bed, read the Bible to him and had prayer. That was like a little window which showed the way into the heart of Mr. Gladstone. And years ago we read how, after a busy day in the House of Commons, he would go home and get down on the floor and play with his granddaughter. He could enter into a child's world and kept through all the years a child heart. This did not interfere with his work in behalf of the nation, nor did it disqualify him from writing on the defence of Christianity. All will agree that Jonathan Edwards was a great man. His seventy "resolutions," by which he planned his life show that; but little things show how human he too was. His references in some letters to "blooming flowers in the spring" indicated that his head was not always in the clouds, and his great work on the "Freedom of the Will" did not dry up the fountain of tears. This extract from a speaker in the House of Commons, but his character is seen in those little things—"those little unremembered acts of kindness and of love." We are told that he was in the habit of buying a paper from a newsboy at a certain street corner, but missed him one day, and for several days. Upon enquiry, he found that he was in the hospital. He went to see him, sat by his bed, read the Bible to him and had prayer. That was like a little window which showed the way into the heart of Mr. Gladstone. And years ago we read how, after a busy day in the House of Commons, he would go home and get down on the floor and play with his granddaughter. He could enter into a child's world and kept through all the years a child heart. This did not interfere with his work in behalf of the nation, nor did it disqualify him from writing on the defence of Christianity. All will agree that Jonathan Edwards was a great man. His seventy "resolutions," by which he planned his life show that; but little things show how human he too was. His references in some letters to "blooming flowers in the spring" indicated that his head was not always in the clouds, and his great work on the "Freedom of the Will" did not dry up the fountain of tears. This extract from a speaker in the House of Commons, but his character is seen in those little things—"those little unremembered acts of kindness and of love." We are told that he was in the habit of buying a paper from a newsboy at a certain street corner, but missed him one day, and for several days. Upon enquiry, he found that he was in the hospital. He went to see him, sat by his bed, read the Bible to him and had prayer. That was like a little window which showed the way into the heart of Mr. Gladstone. And years ago we read how, after a busy day in the House of Commons, he would go home and get down on the floor and play with his granddaughter. He could enter into a child's world and kept through all the years a child heart. This did not interfere with his work in behalf of the nation, nor did it disqualify him from writing on the defence of Christianity. All will agree that Jonathan Edwards was a great man. His seventy "resolutions," by which he planned his life show that; but little things show how human he too was. His references in some letters to "blooming flowers in the spring" indicated that his head was not always in the clouds, and his great work on the "Freedom of the Will" did not dry up the fountain of tears. This extract from a speaker in the House of Commons, but his character is seen in those little things—"those little unremembered acts of kindness and of love." We are told that he was in the habit of buying a paper from a newsboy at a certain street corner, but missed him one day, and for several days. Upon enquiry, he found that he was in the hospital. He went to see him, sat by his bed, read the Bible to him and had prayer. That was like a little window which showed the way into the heart of Mr. Gladstone. And years ago we read how, after a busy day in the House of Commons, he would go home and get down on the floor and play with his granddaughter. He could enter into a child's world and kept through all the years a child heart. This did not interfere with his work in behalf of the nation, nor did it disqualify him from writing on the defence of Christianity. All will agree that Jonathan Edwards was a great man. His seventy "resolutions," by which he planned his life show that; but little things show how human he too was. His references in some letters to "blooming flowers in the spring" indicated that his head was not always in the clouds, and his great work on the "Freedom of the Will" did not dry up