No Blame Is Attached In County Hynes' Death

William Edward Anthony MacQuaid of Bonshaw was absolved of any blame in the highway death of 15-year-old Clifford Hynes of Bunbury who was struck by a car driven by Mr. MacQuaid on Friday night, May 29.

Coroner Dr. L. E. Prose presided at the inquest. Jury members were William MacQuaid, Charlottetown, foreman; Greg Gillispie, Cornwall; Boyce Stevenson, Winsloe; William Oulton, Parkdale; Gordon Bell, Flat River; and John Cook, North River Road.

The first witness called was Dr. A. L. Saunders who examined the body at the P.E.I. Hospital and pronounced the boy dead on arrival. He testified that death was instantaneous due to a fractured skull and the fracture of the first vertebrae of the neck, severing the spinal cord. The provincial pathologists report was read by the coroner.

Chap. Eric Bishop of the Charlottetown branch of the RCMP, who was at the scene, introduced several photographs of the car which was being driven by a 1956 Ford sedan, and a scale drawing of the area. He also testified that the car was in good working order when he tested it.

Witnesses, Mrs. Gerard Duffy, Mrs. Patrick Duffy and Patrick Duffy, all of Port Augustus had been travelling there.

Presbyterians Give Okay To Budget Boost

TORONTO (CP)—A $236,000 budget for 1964 was approved Thursday by the Presbyterians in Canada at its 90th general assembly here.

The church's national objective this year is $2,000,000. Robert E. Aikins of Toronto, chairman of the board of stewardship and budget, warned that Presbyterians would have to increase their donations by 6.2 per cent to reach the 1964 goal.

Professor John Wevers of Toronto, the church's administrative council, indicated that increases in allowances for executive secretaries and college professors would be proposed at next year's general assembly. The church owns and operates three colleges in Canada.

The 250 commissioners attending this meeting will be asked to ratify a proposal for a basic travel allowance of $300 a year for all ministers on full-time salary. This would bring the basic salary allowance up to $1,100 a year.

This figure covers the expense of a minister having a house and allows for other costs.

At Thursday's session the general assembly heard the moderator of the United Church of Canada, Dr. J. B. Murch, challenge Presbyterians to emphasize the reformed doctrine of the church at the conscience of the state, a doctrine that needs to be made as relevant as possible in these days of the welfare state and a rapid social change.

Dr. W. F. Butler, general secretary of the Canadian Council of Churches, told the assembly that the end of a Canadian separation so evident now means that all of us are called upon to expound and live our own convictions in new patterns.

Application By Club Needs 'Further Study'

A member of the Liquor Control Commission said yesterday that further consideration of the Rod and Gun Club's application for a temporary license is necessary. The statement came after fruitless talks during the general assembly of the commission and F. A. Large and Robert MacLeod, who were representing the club.

Three clubs are involved in the talks, which will continue at least until early next week. The Granada Lounge, the Rod and Gun and the Sportsman's have been so far unable to acquire the temporary permit to cover a period of supposedly six weeks at the end of which permanent licenses, based on new regulations under the Liquor Control Act, will be issued.

Since Monday, June 1, all three clubs have been closed as a result of their inability to get temporary licenses when the old regulations went out of effect.

Mr. Large, also representing the Granada, will meet with the commission today in an effort to obtain a license for the establishment, and Lorne Percy, operator of the Sportsman's Club, will meet for discussions with the commission early next week.

Montreal Engineer Possessor Of Shakespeare First Folios

By JANET KASK

MONTREAL (CP)—Montreal engineer Sidney Fisher is much in demand these days, now that William Shakespeare's birth 400 years ago is being commemorated.

Mr. Fisher talks about the Bard of Avon as if he knew him personally, and a look into his town of Mount Royal home confirms that he practically does. In one room, shelves stretch from floor to ceiling holding what he believes is the "principal" privately owned Shakespeare's First Folios (the first collected edition of Shakespeare's plays), the books Shakespeare read, books referring to the Bard written during his lifetime or in the century after his death, and works about the literature, life and manners of the time.

There are the maps and drawings of Shakespeare's London. These occupy a garage now converted into another library.

Altogether the collection includes about 500 items. Books from the Sidney T. Fisher collection can be seen each summer at Ontario's Stratford Shakespearean Festival. Universities borrow his books. Some are on display at Massey College, University of Toronto, and Mr. Fisher has donated two folios to Canadian universities. He is also in demand as a lecturer.

MANUSCRIPTS GONE

Mr. Fisher calls the appearance of Shakespeare's First Folios "the greatest event in the history of literature." They are the closest thing to the original manuscripts, none of which is believed to exist today.

Two of Shakespeare's fellow actors, John Herbie and Henry Condell, published the first collection of his plays in 1623. About 400 copies were sold at about £1 each.

The First Folio of 36 plays was reprinted three times, and were the Second Folio in 1632, Third Folio in 1663-64 and Fourth Folio in 1685. All are extremely valuable today.

"It is generally believed that about 600 copies of each printed and about 100 or so copies of each have survived," Mr. Fisher says. It is now known that the type for the First Folio was partly set from manuscripts in Shakespeare's handwriting.

"Shakespeare suffered more than most of his contemporaries from careless editors and printers. The First Folio contains hundreds of typographical errors, misplaced or omitted lines, wrong page numbers and so on," Mr. Fisher says.
