French Businessmen In Canada Have Own Chamber Of Commerce

By MALCOLM REID

MONTREAL (CP) — Francis Glorieux, Montreal textile manufacturer, has been in Canada for 14 years, but he remains a Frenchman.

Bernard Leclerc, also a Frenchman and also a businessman, lives in Montreal, too. The two men are part of a small community of French citizens in Canada—21,032 at the last census—and officers of a special Montreal group which brings together those who are here for commercial reasons.

La Chambre de Commerce Francaise, Mr. Glorieux says, began in 1888, just three months after the first chamber of commerce in Canada, La Chambre de Commerce du District de Mntreal. Its founders were 45 French fur, wine and other traders who had chosen to come to Canada even after the British brought down the French regime in Quebec.

"The great grandfather of Leon Balcer is an example," says Mr. Glorieux, referring to the independent member of parliament for Trois-Rivieres, Que. "He arrived in 1820."

INTERESTS GROW

But French business interests in Canada have grown in recent years, and now the French group in Montreal contains 100 companies and 250 individuals interested in commercial exchange between the two countries.

Nowadays two thirds of them are Canadians, and not necessarily French - Canadians. La Chambre also has a 100-member chapter in Toronto with titles and bylaws in French.

"We are what we are," says Mr. Glorieux, its secretary.

French investments in Canada stretch as far as Vancouver, where the French concrete firm Ciments Lafarge is established. It has a membership in Toronto chapter of La Chambre. French capital has small slices of Alberta's oil and Saskatchewan's potash.

"We don't participate financially in deals between Canadian and French businessmen, but when our members sit down to their monthly dinners at the Ritz-Carlton in Montreal, naturally they talk business," says Mr. Glorieux.

French investment in Canada, even in Quebec, is not great. "Very small," says economist Alfred Dubuc of the University of Montreal.

"I'm convinced it will always remain marginal," says his colleague Bernard Bonin of the university's commerce school, l'Ecole des Hautes Etudes Commerciales. "All the non-American and non-British investment in Quebec put together totals less than 10 per cent, and the Germans, perhaps also the Belgians, are ahead of the French. The French have difficulty competing with U.S. investment on their own territory."

Even France's commercial counsellor in Montreal, Jacques Plattard, calls it "still modest, but in the last two years Quebec, perhaps because of the common language, has been much more hospitable. It's a start."

HAVE RALLYING POINT

Meanwhile those Frenchmen who have come to Canada for business have a rallying point in La Chambre, which has held dinners to mark the closing of France - Canada deals ranging from the feature film Le Coup de Grace to the electrical equipment consortium Cegelec, which is putting $800,000 into Laprairie, Que., at the invitation of Hydro-Quebec and the Quebec government's General Investment Corporation.

The organization's president is always a Frenchman—at the moment Bernard Leclerc of the financial house credit Foncier Franco-Canadien—but its vice-presidencies are shared.

French vice - president is Pierre Salbaing of the largest and oldest single French-owned enterprise in Canada, Canadian Liquid Air, and the Canadian is insurance broker Gerard Parizeau, father of jacques Parizeau, one of the Quebec government's important economic advisers.

But Canadian exports to France are growing fast—they were up some 60 per cent between 1963 and 1964, to $100,000,000.

Quebec has its own commercial delegates in Paris, Patrick Hyndman and Jean-Yves Papineau. On a recent trip to Quebec they were unable to cite figures of investment brought to the province by their presence. "Often our men act merely as intermediaries," said their chief, Marcel Blais, "but we can say we've gotten results."

Whether the slow investment increase and the faster trade increase will bring more Frenchman to Canada to swell the ranks of La Chambre de Commerce Francaise is another question.

"Frenchmen are not among the most easily - integrated groups," says an immigration official.

And Mr. Plattard, the commercial counsellor, puts it in commercial terms: "Frenchmen don't export themselves much."

Actor Dies During Joke

SAN FRANCISCO, (AP) — Early - morning pedestrians froze in horror Sunday as they watched a 26-year-old actor—clinging by his fingertips to an eighth - storey hotel window—claw for a better grip, then weaken and fall to his death.

Deputy Coroner Mark Alleeson said James Davidson of Beverly Hills, had been hanging out the window of the Sir Francis Drake Hotel for about two minutes as "a practical joke . . . horsing around."

The coroner said Davidson had been drinking heavily before the prank.

About two dozen persons were strolling near the downtown hotel when Davidson let himself out the window, 80 feet above the pavement.

"The women screemed . . . the men just stood there with their mouths open," patrolman Richard Fenlason said.

"He tried to get back up three times" witness said. In the room, Davidson's friend, Paul Lynde, with whom he checked into the hotel Saturday, tried frantically to help.

Fenlason said:

"Lynde told me he saw Davidson was in trouble and he told him to grab hold of his neck. Lynde grabbed him by the wrist. But it was too late."

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophies, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.

Oldest Man In Canada Dies At 116

BUCHANAN, Sask. (CP) — Wasyl Fofanoff, who at an estimated age of 116 was believed to be the oldest man in Canada, died at his farm home in the Buchanan district Saturday night.

Mr. Fofanoff came from Russia in 1899, homesteaded that year 1½ miles southeast of Buchanan and had lived there since then. Buchanan is 165 miles southeast of Saskatoon.

The age of 116 was estimated by his family on the basis of personal papers and records.

In 1959, at an estimated 110 years old, he dug a 10-foot well by himself. Until about two years ago he cut and sawed his own wood.

Persons who knew him said he was hard working, jolly and cheerful and active in community affairs. Poor health prevented him from taking part in Saskatchewan's 60th jubilee celebrations in Buchanan last month.

Survivors include two daughters of his first marriage and a son and a daughter of his second marriage—when he was near 70.

The bidding:

West	North	East	South
Pass	Pass	1♥	1♠
Pass	3♠	Pass	4♠

Opening lead—six of hearts.

A declarer has to feel his way in many hands; he cannot be expected to know from the start exactly how the missing 26 cards are divided. He will generally make a few obvious assumptions, based on either the bidding or the play to date, and act upon them in a normal manner, even though he cannot be 100 per cent sure of his ground.

This process will usually lead him to the best possible result, despite the feeling of groping in the dark that he may experience throughout the play of the hand. Hard thinking is often well rewarded in the end.

Observe South's play in this hand, where West led a heart against four spades. Declarer won it with the ace and took a spade finesse which lost to the king. West returned the nine of diamonds.

It was only trick three, but South already knew as much as he needed to know about the opponents' hands. It was certainly reasonable to assume that West had led a singleton heart, since he would surely have played another heart at this point if he had had one.

It was likewise reasonable to assume that West did not have the queen of diamonds, since he would scarcely have led a diamond if he had had that card.

Declarer therefore went up with the ace (if he had finessed the jack he would have gone down). He then finessed the queen of clubs, cashed the ace, and ruffed a club.

He next played three rounds of trumps, discarding a heart from dummy and at the same time forcing East to reduce his hand to the K-Q of hearts and Q-10 of diamonds.

South now exited with a heart. East was able to cash two heart tricks but then had to lead a diamond away from the Q-10 to dummy's J-6, and as a result of the endplay South made four spades.
