The bidding:

3 NT

Opening lead—seven of spades.

Ardent disciples of the game may get a bang out of this deal played in a par contest recently. The hand has a neat double twist.

On the surface it appears that declarer can make nine tricks against the spade lead—three diamonds which he can develop, and two tricks in each of the other suits. But closer examination reveals that South can be defeated by proper defense.

When the spade is led and dummy ducks, East is supposed to be clever enough not to win with the king. This play forces declarer to win with the queen or jack.

As soon as South leads a diamond, West steps up with the king, leads another spade, and if is curtains for the declarer. East's spades become established and since he still has the ace of diamonds as an entry, the declarer is sunk.

But if East wins the opening spade lead with the king and returns a spade, West will not have another spade to lead when he takes his king of diamonds, and South will wind up with the previously mentioned nine tricks.

However, such is the nature of the deal that even if East errs by winning the first spade lead with the king, the defense an still recover its equilibrium and defeat the contract by a most extraordinary play.

Assume East takes the king and returns a spade. Declarer wins with the queen and leads a diamond towards dummy. West ducks. East takes the jack with the ace and plays the third round of spades.

West discards the king of diamonds!

From this stroke declarer cannot recover. South cannot produce nine tricks without bringing home the diamond suit. East still has 10-3 of diamonds left to cope with dummy's Q-8-5-2. There is no balm in Gilead, South must go down.

A remarkable hand. First East gets a chance to shine by refusing to take his king, and then, if East slips, West gets a chance to recover the fumble by discarding a king.

Zounds!
